The CHS community is unfortunately losing yet another valuable faculty member to retirement. For the past 34 years, Mr. Edward Leonard has served in the field of education, and works as one of our veteran guidance counselors at Cohasset Middle-High School. His retirement will surely be felt by all of us, as we know that it will be impossible to replace the hard work and dedication Mr. Leonard has put into every aspect of what he does. As Mr. Leonard said, "I knew at a young age that I wanted to help others," which is clearly evidenced in his compassion for his job and his relationships with the students, the staff, and the faculty.

Edward Leonard, guidance counselor, will retire at the end of the school year.

His retirement will surely be felt by all of us, as we know that it will be impossible to replace the hard work and dedication Mr. Leonard has put into every aspect of what he does.

His desire and aptitude for aiding people was exposed at an early age. Raised in a family with eight children, Mr. Leonard became very close with one of his sisters, who is handicapped. Growing up he enjoyed helping his sister, and knew he could do similar work with others when he was older. After graduating from Bridgewater State College with a degree in Special Education, Mr. Leonard began working in his hometown at Milton High School in 1974, where he was employed as a Special Education teacher. He left Milton to change his direction and area of discipline at Hanover Middle School as a guidance counselor; however, he was riffed due to budget cutbacks. He then journeyed to Sacred Heart High School in Kingston where he served as a counselor, and finally docked his ship in Cohasset in 1984, working as the guidance counselor for grades seven through 12. In 1986, Mr. Leonard became the Adjustment Counselor at Joseph Osgood and Deer Hill Elementary schools, but finally, in 1999, he returned to CHS as the guidance counselor.

Mr. Leonard and his wife Pat have been married for the past 20 years and have four children between them. He first came to Cohasset in 1984; he was single and looking for love. At a graduation party for Stacie Stobart, a former student of his, Stacie introduced him to his current wife, who was Stacie's mom's best friend. According to Mr. Leonard, "Stacie worked 'behind the scene' to make sure we went out on a date!" Mr. Leonard and Stacie now have two sons and two stepsons, all of whom he and his wife have raised together. Two of his sons are engineers, one is an architect, and one is a police officer. He has five grandsons, ranging from ages two to six. As you can imagine, "When they are together, there is enough energy produced that Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant could be shut down," Mr. Leonard says. Thankfully, he shares the same level of enthusiasm for his family as he does for his students, which has proven to be encouraging and inspiring.

Despite Mr. Leonard's love for his job, his only complaint about the public education system is the policies put forth in the "No Child Left Behind Act." The increase in standardized tests throughout the years has made schools more and more focused on just the test scores rather than the child's abilities. The younger students of CHS will have to endure more tests than any previous grades. Mr. Leonard feels that these changes will create an education system in which the intelligence of students is now based solely off test scores, an unfortunate occurrence considering that the academic potential of students cannot be adequately reflected through standardized tests.

Nevertheless, Cohasset High School triggers several happy moments for Mr. Leonard. When asked what his favorite memory from working here was, he recalled dressing up in an elf costume for the holidays, asking for donations around the school. He says, "I really hope there are no pictures of that." This is only one of hundreds of examples of how Mr. Leonard has brought a special light into CHS with his sense of generosity and sense of humor. School would not be school without being greeted by Mr. Leonard with a warm smile and hello, and he has without doubt incorporated some fun into the daily regime of school.

After spending 24 years at Cohasset schools, the relationships Mr. Leonard has built in Cohasset have been exceptional. When he was asked what he would miss the most at CHS, Mr. Leonard said, "I will definitely miss the relationships with my students and the community. It is nice to see people around town, like at road races...and seeing familiar faces." The close relationships the community and students of Cohasset have made with Mr. Leonard will always be valued.

This senior class would agree that anyone retiring with the Class Of 2008 seems very appropriate. As Mr. Leonard said, "I feel like I have become very close with this class throughout the years and I will be very happy to walk onto the stage with [them]." We are proud to have him be a part of our graduation this upcoming June.

Although Mr. Leonard does not have specific plans for his future after retiring, he hopes to perhaps look into occupations in the medical field. He is sure he wants to do something new in his future, however, and whatever it is, we all hope he succeeds.

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

In the early 1900s, just like today, children made valentine cards to exchange with friends. This one, made by Edith R. Pratt, Cohasset, Mass. has a poem inside:

Take a gift, a flower from me,
Sweetest Valentine.
Simple shall its message be,
My heart is thine.

Edith was born on Dec. 17, 1894 but her Valentine's Day card is undated. We wonder which lucky boy was the intended recipient.

Resolution on sewer staging area

Since the early fall, the town's contractor for the large project, L M Holdings, has been using a small parcel at 198 Jerusalem Road as its home base for operations.

The decision is significant in it allows the staging area to remain where it is, a site in the midst of the construction area around Little Harbor/Atlantic Avenue. Project managers explained during the hearings that the staging area cut down on transportation costs and time wasted during the day allowing the contractor to work quickly and efficiently.

During the hearings, sewer commissioners and residents alike said if the staging area is forced to move as a result of the appeal, the $15.2 million project could face delays and additional cost. Residents of Little Harbor, many of them with failing septic systems, have waited years to be hooked up to town sewer.

Since the early fall, the town's contractor for the large project, L M Holdings, has been using a small parcel at 198 Jerusalem Road as its home base for operations. The Building Inspector Bob Egan gave a verbal go ahead to use the site before work began, but Craven of 6 Nichols Road appealed his decision to bring the issue before the Zoning Board. At the hearings, attorney Rich Henderson represented Craven and another neighbor Paula Becker of 185 Jerusalem Road in the appeal.

With the ZBA solely focused on if the staging area is allowed under the town's zoning bylaws, the pivotal issue throughout the hearings and the decision became whether the town had operational control of the site. The zoning bylaws allow the staging area use in a residential district if the town or other governmental agency is operating the use of the property.

"In the end, we were satisfied the town did have operational responsibility and ultimately had control," said Chittick, "the town could step in if they needed to intervene on the site."

Chittick said documentation, including a memorandum of agreement signed by the L M Holdings (the contractor), the town, and the Leland and Leonora Jenkins, the property owners, as well as verbal testimony by the Sewer Commission and project manager Dan Coughlin of Coughlin Environmental Services tipped the scale.

Issues with the contract between the town and the contractor were a main piece of discussion in the final hearing brought on by Zoning Board member Kathleen Hunter. But, Chittick said while the issues were interesting to mull over, they were not related to zoning.

The appeal of the staging area could be taken to a higher court, either Superior Court or Land Court. Craven declined to comment and Becker referred the Mariner to attorney Henderson. A call to the Henderson's office was not returned by press time.

The Sewer Commission is satisfied with the decision, "this is the right decision for the town and the project. The sewer project will add 485 Little Harbor homes to town sewer and the benefits of a year and half of inconvenience is a cleaner environment, brand new roads and increased property values," said Sewer Commission Chairman Sean Cunning, adding that all homes connecting to town sewer are experiencing inconvenience.

"We are happy to work with the abutters to soften the impact of the (staging area) site," said Cunning.

Siobhan Stackpole holds their Westie, Macho Blanco, who was run over by an SUV resulting in a shattered pelvis that is seen in the x-rays on the wall. Luckily for Macho, Fawn Stevenson, right of Crazy Paws, was there to save the day to the delight of Liza Riedel, 11, Siobhan's daughter, and Siobhan's boyfriend, Terence Shapiro.

Memories for a cup of coffee. As they walked down South Main Street, Stackpole noticed Macho was unusually interested in something across the street. As they approached French Memories, Macho managed to get off his leash and dart across the street.

The next few seconds, Stackpole says, passed as if in slow motion. She tried to alert the driver of the SUV of her little white dog running across the street without putting herself in harm's way. But it was too late and Stackpole watched in horror as Macho was run over by the front wheel of the huge vehicle.

"I was pretty certain he was not going to make it," says Stackpole. A Good Samaritan, who Stackpole still doesn't know the identity of, rushed out of French Memories to their aid. She helped them scoop up Macho from the road and drove them immediately to her vet, Crazy Paws in James Brook Crossing on Pleasant Street. When they arrived the door was locked.

"But when they saw the look in our eyes, the staff promptly opened up and surrounded Macho," says Stackpole. Veterinarian Fawn Stevenson immediately went to work to make sure Macho didn't go into shock from the pain and then gave him medicine to deal with the pain. X-rays showed Macho had shattered his pelvis in five places and broken both his hind legs.

"The poor little guy was a mess," says Dr. Stevenson. She recommended Macho stay the weekend at Crazy Paws and then head to an orthopedic veterinary surgeon, Dr. David Diamond, at the South Shore Animal Hospital on Monday.

Heartbroken and sick with worry, Stackpole headed home to break the news to daughter Liza Riedel. A couple of hours later, Stevenson called to tell them she had decided to take Macho to her home for the weekend to keep a close eye on him.

"We take him everywhere with us so being in a place unfamiliar without any human contact wouldn't have been good," says Stackpole, adding Stevenson recognized Macho was part human and needed companionship especially during this time.

Every two hours, Stevenson gave him pain medication to make him as comfortable as possible. She was able to hand feed him small pieces of food. Macho was in extreme pain and anxious, but Stevenson found ways to keep him calm.

"He's super humanized so one of the ways to keep him calm was to turn on the television," says Stevenson, who looked at the weekend as a chance to stay home and unwind, "we watched old movies together."

The next morning, Stackpole and Liza visited Macho at Stevenson's home. He was upstairs in a playpen, closely monitored by Stevenson, her Doberman pincher and her ferret.

The following Monday, Stackpole brought Macho to the South Shore Animal Hospital in Weymouth. When they arrived the receiving vet, Ann Klocke noticed Macho was paler than he should be. Macho needed a blood transfusion before he could undergo the three surgeries he would need to recover.

"The dog definitely has a tough spirit," says Stevenson, which helped him fight through the pain. When she needed to give him medicine or move him she says, "he'd look me dead in the eye and stay connected with me. He's a bright dog with a lot of trust and a strong spirit."

Although it was through her daughter's research and persistence Macho came into their lives, Stackpole says she had no idea how much she could fall in love with an animal. Liza describes Macho as "a genius" who is spunky, friendly and curious. His best friends are an English mastiff and a German shepherd, "he has no idea he's that small," Liza says.

Macho is expected to make a full recovery and be back to being the friendly puppy he is over the next few months, "he's doing a lot better, you can see he wants to chase the cat again," says Stackpole with a laugh.

"He's got age on his side and people not leaving him alone for a minute. It's obvious his family really, really loves him," says Stevenson, "he has a long life ahead of him."

Stackpole says Macho will likely always have a bit of a swagger in his step, but that will only add to his spirited personality.

"I attribute his survival to prayers of friends and strangers, the dedicated staff at South Shore Animal Hospital, Macho's huge heart and generous spirit, and most of all to the folks at Crazy Paws, especially Fawn Stevenson, who took a personal approach and brought a broken, confused creature into her home and nursed him back to life. We will be forever grateful," says Stackpole.

OPINION

'A good man'

As editor of the Cohasset Mariner, it is my pleasure to announce that Merle Brown of Beechwood Street is the Citizen of the Year.

The town can count itself lucky that Merle — who was born in a house right around the corner from the home where he lives today with his wife, Joan – has never wanted to live anyplace else.

The grandfather of five and father of two has spent most of his "free" time for decades volunteering for myriad programs and projects.

Some readers may not know that Merle was the "mover" behind restoring the front doors in the old section of Town Hall a couple of years ago. In his frank, unassuming way – Merle says he just got tired of the fact they would not open and close properly.

Merle is not one who sits on the sidelines. His commitment to community service started with the Boy Scouts, a program that he remains involved in today and has helped at least seven young men reach Eagle Scout, the highest rank a Scout can earn.

While nominations were open, 36 individuals took the time to propose candidates for the annual award, detailing the nominee's contributions to help make this town we all love a better place.

The selection committee consisting of Debbie Shadd of 31 Summer St.; Sheila Evans of 72 N. Main St., and Bill Burnett of 11 Linden Dr., and editor Mary Ford met at the Cohasset Mariner Office in Hingham Square on Sunday afternoon to review all the heartfelt letters of nomination. The decision to select Merle was unanimous but not reached without considerable discussion about all the very deserving candidates

Taffy and Jeff Nothnagle of Atlantic Avenue put is best in their nomination.

"Merle Brown represents so much that is good about Cohasset," they wrote. They noted that when Merle was a selectman (he served four terms), he always answered telephone calls and they always knew where he stood on an issue. "We, like so many, felt he was the people's selectman."

When asked what motivates him to be so involved, Merle replies in his trademark, modest manner "I like doing it. I can't sit around and do nothing."

Jane Long of Cedar Street wrote in her letter nominating Merle that Cohasset is fortunate to have been able to count Merle among its population. "Throughout Merle's life he has consistently done as much as he could for the town he loves," she stated.

Some readers who nominated Merle went to Town Hall and pored over Town Reports so they could provide a list enumerating all that Merle has done in an "official" capacity. The list is practically endless and includes service on the Board of Selectmen, Conservation Commission, Advisory Committee, Recycling Committee, Beechwood Ballpark Committee, and also being instrumental in seeing the town had a new DPW facility,

"I am pleased to be counted among his many friends," wrote Carol L. Martin of N. Main Street.

Merle has shared his construction expertise for years as part of the Appalachia Service Project. "He always showed enthusiasm and willingness to get a job done, along with a good sense of humor when conditions turned out to be less than ideal," wrote Margot Cheel of Margin Street. "With good cheer, he'd find a way to do what was needed."

Merle's most recent effort has been helping to see the tired-out, old Beechwood Ballpark brought back to life. Again, he stepped forward and helped create a "field of dreams," that Merle hopes will return Beechwood to the village atmosphere, which the neighborhood had in his youth.

Margy Charles of Linden Drive summed Merle up in a few simple lines, "A good man! Can there be any definition in its simplicity, more ennobling?"

With this award, the Cohasset Mariner offers recognition for making a difference. In our society too many role models go unrecognized. Too often people today look to the sports, rock or movie stars with envy, when the real hero is the local police officer, firefighter, parent, teacher, church leader or government official.

The annual Citizen of the Year Award is our way of taking our hats off to those among us who go that extra mile without asking for anything in return but the intrinsic reward of helping to make Cohasset a better place.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Government's slippery slope

TO THE EDITOR:

Although I am not a member of the George H. Mealy Post of the American Legion, I am a World War II veteran, and I admire the perspective of one of the Legion members and particularly the attitude of Mr. Paul Carlson, a Cohasset Selectman, for stalling at least temporarily a possible amendment to the town's Smoking Bylaw to force a smoking ban within buildings of a private nature.

Of course, smoking is not in the best interests of good health, but the issue is more important than that. From time immemorial, one's home and that's to assume one's private club, has been known to be one's castle. When the time comes that town, state or federal laws intrude upon activities within our private sanctuaries, that edict will have accomplished a frightening transgression into personal lives. It would further grease the slippery slope of governmental authorities nibbling away at personal freedoms we have long held dear.

I would suspect that the George H. Mealy Post would eventually make an intelligent decision to curtail smoking, but that should be in the realm of its own judgment and not the town's mandate.

Bernard's rumor

TO THE EDITOR:

We have been bombarded lately with some very disturbing news! Someone has started a rumor that Bernard's has closed! We would love to let everyone know that we have not closed, in fact, we are preparing to celebrate our 10th birthday this October. We are still open for dinner Wednesday through Sunday evenings. Thank you for your help and support.

BC High football player praised

TO THE EDITOR/SPORTS EDITOR:

After reviewing the Mariner's All-Scholastic football team, I would like to highlight the play of Boston College High School senior and Cohasset resident, Cody Morgan. Over the past several years, I have greatly enjoyed following Boston College High School's football program compete against the best high school football teams in Massachusetts with great success. Morgan was at the core of BCH's success fulfilling the need of making timely big plays and was often seen by many of us on the sidelines as the most important player on the field, especially in key match-ups against Division I powerhouses like Brockton, Xaverian and Andover. Morgan plays the game with an admirable combination of intensity, athleticism and sportsmanship.

Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to acknowledge the play of a Cohasset resident whose athletic abilities compare quite favorably with the talented members of the Mariner's All-Scholastic team.

Too much water: fixing the problem

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Five years ago, the EPA revised the Clean Water Act to make its provisions for managing stormwater more effective. Among other things, the EPA mandated that communities must have a stormwater bylaw with six principal features: a stormwater management plan for land disturbance; post construction maintenance of stormwater remediation; creation of a permit system; a program for public outreach; and an annual report with a list of requirements and prohibition of illicit discharges.

At the time, the Board of Health, because of its negative impact on public health, was the only agency in Town interested in the growing stormwater problem. The board had observed the poor sanitary conditions that accompanied overflowing septic systems because of ignorance about the conditions needed for treatment in areas with unacceptable soil conditions. The bacterial conditions appearing in many stormwater catchbasins in Town closely resembled those found near failed septic systems, and when these basins overflowed at the beginning of a rainstorm, water with high bacterial count was swept onto lawns, fields and open areas, eventually into water bodies which became ever more frequently polluted by the effect.

The situation continued until in 2005, beach closings from harbor pollution reached a new high. Finally, on Mothers Day in 2006, several back yards on Elm Street were filled with water continuously, and cellars around Jacobs Meadow were becoming impossible to clear. Several years previously, water from James Brook had filled the Post Office parking lot after rain and became a continuing issue despite attempts to improve drainage. Finally in 2007, downtown revitalization and the "T" project was finished. The result for Jacobs Meadow was a disaster. Virtually every rain fills the meadow and adjacent back yards with virtually no relief.

The only good news from the above scenario is that a large consensus believes that something should be done about stormwater. Last year, the Selectmen formed a stormwater committee whose purpose was to recommend a course of action. Their report in December indicated considerable progress. The committee was able identify and find partial funding for 10 stormwater projects around Jacobs Meadow which should begin

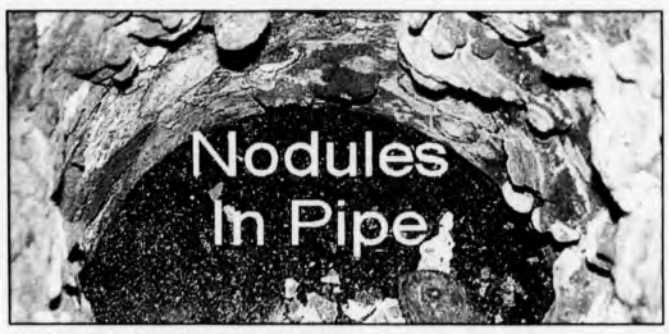
MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush Project – The South Shore Art Center is hosting a reception Friday, Feb. 15 from 6 to 8 p.m. to kick off a new series of gallery exhibits. The exhibit in the Dillon Gallery is an exhibition entitled "All Aboard: The Train Show." The paintings and photographs highlight our very own Greenbush railroad. The show will be available through March 30. Please come and see these marvelous artistic interpretations of the railroad.

Little Harbor Project – In last week's article, we started talking about reasons for the Little Harbor Project, which combines sewer, water and storm drainage. From the sewer aspect, it's easy. The Sewer Commission is adding sewer service to all the areas around Little Harbor. This is one of the worst areas in Town to attempt construction of a septic system due to the extensive ledge and environmentally protected harbor area. The addition of sewers will offer the prospect of substantially reducing the pollution that now finds its way into the Little Harbor watershed.

But, why are we doing water services? Don't all residents have water now? Yes, they do. But, the present system needs attention in specific areas. Over the past several years the Water Commission has had a policy of upgrading areas that are contributing to low pressure, or areas where frequent breaks occur, and so on. Why do these things happen? Well, in some instances, the water mains are just too small or in poor condition so the water pressure suffers. Remember water pressure is not only an issue for our homes, but is a fire fighting safety issue as well. So, what can cause water pressure to drop? Perhaps the number of homes in the area was expanded since the water lines were originally installed. Or, the water consumption at the homes has increased due to lawn sprinklers, new bathrooms, or other water consuming appliances that may have been added.



Another reason for low pressure is that some older pipes have clogged with a build up of deposits which effectively reduces the inside diameter of the pipe. The technical term for this clogging phenomenon is "tuberculation." Tuberculation not only decreases the inside diameter of the pipe, but it adds roughness to the inside of the pipe. (See the photo of nodules on the inside of a pipe.) Both of these phenomena make it harder for water to flow through the pipe and lowers the pressure to the customer.

Some of the new water lines are being installed to "loop" existing dead end water mains. By looping the mains, specific areas can be served with water supplied from two different directions. This helps to stabilize pressure and improves essential high capacity water needs such as emergency fire service. For example, the water line in White Head Road is being looped to the lines in Sandy Beach Road. This will improve the general water pressure and add to the fire fighting capability in these neighborhoods.

Occasionally, water lines have been in service so long that they deteriorate and leak. If the leak is small, it may go unnoticed, at least until the leak grows larger. In areas with frequent breaks and service interruptions, it is good practice to periodically examine these water lines. If the lines have deteriorated significantly, the Water Department must plan for their replacement.

Pipe leak caused by a pressure point.

Pipe nodules interfere with water flow.

Leaks can also be caused by improper water line installation. If sharp stones and rocks are put back into the water line trench such that they can come directly in contact with the pipe, the rocks can actually wear through the pipe at their contact points. One such pipe leak is shown in the accompanying photo. This is why engineers carefully specify the materials that are replaced into the trench around the water lines. (Actually this applies to all kinds of underground pipes.) Usually, the soil material in Cohasset is so filled with rock that it is hauled away and better new material is put back into the trench.

So, that's why the water lines in critical areas of the Little Harbor are being added or upgraded.

Fear is not fun for 1980s gal

THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

When did we become a society of daredevils? I must have missed the memo on that one. Because, despite my belief that "she who has the most fun wins;" I can't think of a single situation where believing that I could possibly die, or maim myself in some horrendously bloody, "Grey's Anatomy" "very special episode" sort of way, could ever be confused with fun. In my world, "fun" and "fear" are two diametrically opposed concepts.

Yet, I seem to be in the minority. This is something I never really noticed until I re-entered the dating scene. In the old days, we might meet a date at a bar, take in a movie, or go see a band. But, today, it seems that dating has evolved into a series of mini-Survivor episodes, where I'm being voted off the singles' island because I don't scuba, ski or skydive.

Now, I admit that I'm not the most outdoorsy type and prefer tennis whites to camouflage, and golf shoes to hiking boots. But, what's up with wanting me to play paintball? Using me for target practice this early in a relationship is one red flag that even I couldn't miss. Speaking of red flags, thanks for the invite, but really, I have no deep-rooted desire to watch you run with the bulls in Pamplona.

Sea kayaking? White-water rafting? Pass. An early attempt to ride some rapids had me literally up a raging creek without a paddle, or raft, for that matter. Rock climbing? Not in this lifetime. Fear of heights, as well as the thought of someone staring at my backside the whole time. Horseback riding? Sadly, no. My last leisurely trail ride ended up as an audition for "Seabiscuit," when my horse decided he was just plain tired of looking at the other horses' backsides. So, how about that ride on the back of your brand new motorcycle? Sorry, I'm not risking my life for someone else's midlife crisis.

Generally, my refusals garner responses like: "Hey Babe, you need to lighten up and relax more." Sure thing, … right after you explain to me how any of those activities are relaxing.

Yet, it's not just the boys. It seems that most of my girlfriends spend their vacations taking flying lessons, camping, or cycling across Europe. Even downhill skiing is not enough anymore. Now they need to be dropped out of helicopters somewhere in the middle of Canada with nothing but an energy bar and an iPhone.

Not that I haven't had my own share of adventures. I travel the world, frequently drive in Boston traffic, and even hold up the line as I attempt to order a "small, regular coffee" in Starbucks. The difference is that putting myself in personal danger is not actually the point of these activities.

Still, sometimes adventures sneak up on you. Like on my last vacation, where I conquered my fear of fish just long enough to take my son snorkeling. While I was assured that it was all perfectly safe for him, it was clear that they didn't realize that I was the one mentally unprepared to swim alongside a four-foot shark and his barracuda buddy.

As I recovered at the bar over a Pina Colada, I realized that maybe I'm living in the wrong decade. Perhaps, I really am a 1980s kind of gal. After all, I like Pina Coladas, and getting caught in the rain. I'm not into yoga; I am into champagne … Yes. Rupert Holmes had it right, because that sounds much more like my type of escape (or vacation, for that matter).

Diane K. Danielson is the author of "The Savvy Gal's Guide to Online Networking (or What Would Jane Austen Do?)" and a Cohasset resident who intends to spend her future vacations having fun on dry land.

LIBRARY CORNER

The following events will take place at Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 35 Ripley Road. For more information, call 781-383-1348 or visit cohassetlibrary.org

Holiday Closing – The library will be closed for Presidents Day on Monday, Feb. 18.

Knitting Group – The Knitting Group will meet at 10 a.m., on Feb. 20, in the Meeting Room. All knitters are welcome. Next meeting will be March 12.

Independent Film Night – The library will show the independent film "Adam's Apples" at 6 p.m., on Thursday, Feb. 21. Free admission and refreshments provided by the Friends of the Library. Ivan is an unusually optimistic preacher who takes in convicts to help around the remote, rural church he ministers to. His newest "helper" is Adam, a vicious neo-Nazi anxiously serving his community service time so he can return to hell-raising. Asked to set a goal for his stay, Adam sarcastically answers that he'd like to bake a pie. Ivan cheerfully takes that statement at face value and puts him in charge of the parish's pride and joy: the only apple tree in the vicinity. Grasping the extent of Ivan's crazed, preternatural determination to look on the bright side of everything, Adam decides to shake Ivan out of his rose-colored world. Danish with English subtitles. 94 minutes.

Greening Your Suburban Lifestyle – Join Jim Shipsky, from Sustainable Cohasset, as he talks about how to help make a better world by going green at 3 p.m., on Sunday, Feb. 24, in the Meeting Room. The talk is free and all are welcome. This is a Cohasset Reads Together event.

Library Book Group – Join the group for coffee and discussion of Bill Bryson's "A Walk in the Woods" at 10 a.m., on Wednesday, Feb. 27. Bryson's book was chosen as one of the selections for Cohasset Reads Together because it celebrates the American wilderness. Free. All are welcome.

Appalachian Trail Slide Show – Learn about what it takes to maintain and manage the Appalachian Trail from Massachusetts Appalachian Trail Management Committee member Steve Smith. Smith will present a slide show of the trail at 7 p.m., on Thursday, Feb. 28. This is a Cohasset Reads Together event. Free. All are welcome. Seating is limited.

Cohasset Reads Together Vacation Program

The following programs will be held from Tuesday, Feb. 19, through Friday, Feb. 22. A caregiver must accompany young children to any of the vacation programs.

Create an Animal – Children can drop-in to create a pond or woodland animal between 10:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 19, in the Story Room.

Eyes on Owls – A live owl show, "Eyes on Owls, will be held at 3 p.m., Wednesday, Feb. 20, in the Meeting Room. This show requires tickets and is suggested for children 5 and up. Free tickets will be available starting Wednesday, Feb. 13, at the circulation desk.

Create a Friendship Necklace – Children are invited to drop-in to create a friendship necklace between 10:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m., Thursday, Feb. 21, in the Story Room.

Movie Day – The movie, "Flipper," for children in grade 3 and up, will be shown from 2 to 3:45 p.m., Friday, Feb. 22, in the Meeting Room. The movie is rated PG and stars Elijah Wood and Paul Hogan. Tickets are required for this free event and are available at the circulation desk.

Recollections of the Maharishi

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was working for the Sunday Herald at the time under the legendary editor Homer Jenks when we got the word that Prudence Farrow, Mia's sister, was in town…

I was thumbing through the obituary pages the other day, as those of us who have reached four score and three years in age are wont to do, when I came across a familiar name — Maharishi Mahesh Yogi.

I met the Maharishi once, or at least I think I did. There were so many little men with gray beards and saffron robes roaming around the States in the name of Transcendental Meditation 40 years ago that it was difficult to tell them apart.

I was working for the Sunday Herald at the time under the legendary editor Homer Jenks when we got the word that Prudence Farrow, Mia's sister, was in town with her personal guru in tow and if we got it in gear we could interview him.

I got the assignment since my résumé showed a brief stint as religion writer for the Associated Press, although the Maharishi's connection with religion was as strained as my credentials as a religion writer.

The AP had a religion editor who wrote a popular column for Saturday morning papers and the few remaining Saturday afternoon papers wanted one too. We drew lots. I lost. The resulting column was forever known as the black bean.

But the years of dealing with the Rev. Carl McIntyre's upstart American Council of Churches and the promoters of World Harvest Evangelism didn't prepare me for the Maharishi.

I met Prudence and her guru in a Back Bay apartment that was headquarters for something called Rising Sun Christianity. Prudence was an attractive, waiflike blonde who looked like her sister before Woody Allen moved in. The Maharishi looked like a generic maharishi from central casting.

I got the interview started with what I thought was a good question. The Maharishi answered and answered and answered. In less than 10 minutes I knew I was in trouble. I hadn't the foggiest idea what he was talking about. It was like a football writer interviewing Casey Stengel.

I took notes, mostly to keep the franchise, although occasionally I'd recognize a word or a phrase or even a whole sentence. It was just that I couldn't connect them up into a meaningful paragraph. Prudence was no help. She just kept nodding with a beatific smile on her face, like she understood every word.

The interview lasted maybe an hour. I left entertaining the thought that if I got hit by a car maybe I would be hospitalized long enough so that Homer would forget the story and I wouldn't have to write it. No such luck. It was a struggle to write it, but Homer liked it and it went into the paper and I went on to something else.

His obit said the Maharishi was 91 years old when he died and he taught his disciples to recite every morning and evening a simple sound, or mantra, and delve into their consciousness.

"Don't fight darkness. Bring the light and the darkness will disappear," he would say.

That doesn't sound like the Maharishi I met.

Deregulation vs. Nuclear Energy

COMMENTARY

MURRY CAMPBELL

Some have asked why electric utility deregulation hampers the exploitation of sorely-needed nuclear energy. The short answer is that deregulation inhibits the ability of utilities to finance costly new generating plant largely with low-interest bonds, together with a small percentage of shares, which promise only modest dividends. Regulated utilities could market these low-return securities because of the negligible risk; the ability to earn the interest and dividends and pay off the bonds was virtually assured by the state-regulated selling price of electricity. The cost of financing the huge capital costs of new and replacement generating plant is a very large component of the total of all the costs that determine the cost of generating and distributing electricity.

The selling prices of electricity were set by the state-regulating agency with the intent of covering the utility's costs including reasonable (generally modest but fairly certain) dividends to its shareholders. In return for this assurance of continued financial viability, the utility was required (and enabled) to provide reliable service at reasonable (and controlled) prices in its "franchised" area and to acquire additional and replacement generating plant to satisfy the inexorable increase in electricity demand. (Note that cost of electricity has two versions: the cost of a kilowatt hour delivered, and the cost resulting from a kilowatt hour not delivered when needed, especially to industries. Hence reliability is important).

The public was assured of adequate and reliable supply of electricity, at controlled prices unlikely to be bettered by hit-or-miss "competitive" free market provision of generation additions/replacements.

Deregulation has effectively removed from the utilities the responsibility for planning for and procurement of generating plant additions and replacements, which they had done in a very rational way. Now it is left largely to "the free market" to respond i.e. to the chance that some entrepreneurial organization will decide it is worth the risk of raising capital to build and operate a generating plant. Of course, such organizations can't sell bonds at the high ratings and low interest that regulated utilities could, so the cost of financing is much greater. Nuclear generating plants have even higher first costs than fossil fueled plants (although much lower fuel costs that more than compensate in determining overall generating cost), so the method of financing is very important, and has a significant effect on the cost of generation. The bottom line is that not many organizations are competing to build generating plants, especially plants with high initial cost. Those being built may not be the best choices for long-term economics and reliability, and tend to use expensive fuel (such as natural gas) in order to minimize first cost.

Regulation of utilities has served the nation well for about a century and was a most useful compromise between free enterprise and government control. Abandonment for the chimera of competition was shortsighted. Only about half of the states fell for it, and at least one (California) seems inclined to climb back into the security of regulation.

The considerations are of course more complex than this simplistic explanation but that is the essence of the argument against deregulation. A more potent argument is its demonstrated lack of success. Once again has been demonstrated the old adage "If it ain't broke, don't fix it!"

A treat for Treat's Pond

Funding sought for salt marsh restoration

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Treat's Pond restoration is back in the spotlight.

The Board of Selectmen put its support behind a Town Meeting article to fund the Treat's Pond restoration project proposed over the summer.

A citizens petition was submitted for the Town Warrant, but now the Selectmen would like to put their own name and weight behind the article. Pending agreement from the citizens petition proponents, the Board of Selectmen will be putting forth the article themselves.

"I think it will give it more weight with the federal government and give it more weight at Town Meeting."
— Gary Vanderweil, Selectman Chairman

The Treat's Pond restoration project comes with a bit of history. A $250,000 congressional appropriation was initially provided to the town so the Army Corps of Engineers could begin the planning of the project. Last summer, the Treat's Pond restoration project came into renewed focus when representatives from the Army Corps of Engineers presented their solutions to restore Treat's Pond to its historical state as a saltwater marsh. Treat's Pond is located on the ocean side of Atlantic Avenue near Whitehead Road.

The Army Corps of Engineers presented two viable solutions for the restoration, one with an outfall pipe in the inner harbor (via Atlantic Avenue) and the other an outfall pipe to the outer harbor (via Whitehead Road and Whale Meadow). No position was taken at the time as to which of the option the Selectmen preferred.

However, the Board of Selectmen wrote to US Representative William Delahunt to convey its support for additional funding to restore Treat's Pond. In late December, the town of Cohasset was notified a congressional appropriation of $728,000 had been secured for the environmental restoration project for Treat's Pond.

Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil broached the subject of the Board of Selectmen putting forth the article as opposed to leaving it as a citizens petition, "I think it will give it more weight with the federal government and give it more weight at Town Meeting," said Vanderweil, adding he considers the project to be an element of flood control.

"I definitely agree, we took an active position asking Congressman Delahunt to go after the funds," said Vice Chairman Ted Carr. Selectmen Fred Koed and Paul Carlson agreed with the move.

There was consensus among the board members to advocate for the outer harbor outfall pipe, as opposed to the inner harbor pipe. At the Army Corps of Engineers presentation last summer, the selectmen and the engineers agreed this outer harbor option came with real estate easement complications.

The amount of funds to be requested will be determined in the next month leading up to Town Meeting. Town Manager Bill Griffin said they would have a number by end of the month after consulting with the Army Corps.

At their presentation over the summer, the Army Corps engineers estimated a non-federal source contribution, either town or state funds, to be upwards of $400,000.

In addition to restoring the salt marsh, the Army Corps has said the project would relieve some of the flooding in the area during major storm events.

The Selectmen voted 4-0 to make the Treat's Pond restoration funding article a Board of Selectmen sponsored article. Selectmen Ralph Dormitzer, who recused himself from previous discussion on Treat's Pond over the summer, was absent from the meeting.

POLITICAL NOTES

DTC movie night

Cohasset Democratic Town Committee continues its movie night series at 7 p.m., on Friday, Feb. 15. All movies are chosen to both enlighten and entertain and focus on social/political subjects. "Anytown USA" will be shown in the Community Room at Paul Pratt Library. This documentary features the story of a hotly contested mayoral campaign in the town of Bogota, N.J.

Join the Democratic Town Committee for this behind-the-scenes story of a hard-fought, small town election depicted in this film. This political race between a conservative Republican incumbent, a retired Democrat brought back into the fray and a disabled, write-in candidate will keep viewers in suspense with its twists and turns.

The movie is free of charge and refreshments will be provided.

Quigley supporters

"My intention is to continue to reach out and solicit opinion throughout the campaign and my term in office. Things look different from outside Town Hall," said Karen Quigley, about her run for selectman. "I don't want to lose that valuable perspective. To help keep me grounded in that reality, I've sought out a diverse group of individuals."

"I am proud and grateful to have the following individuals among those campaigning on my behalf: Melissa Browne, Treasurer; Tom Wolf, Campaign Manager; Paul Pattison, Katherine Stanton, Vee Roebuck, Jody Butman, Sallyann Chatterton, Joy Nash, Julie Guild, Nancy Garrison, Ted and Amy Purdy, Robin & Marylou Lawrence, John K. McNabb, Jr., Tina Watson, Jack & Lisa Creighton, and Ben Watson."

PAC workshop on organizing skills

Back by popular demand, all are welcome to join the Parent Advisory Council for a presentation of "From Direction to Done," by Sarah Ward, at 7 p.m., Tuesday, March 4, in the auditorium of Cohasset High School at 143 Pond St.

The workshop is helpful for parents of all students, especially for those that struggle with organization. Sarah Ward will provide parents with strategies they can use in order for children to self regulate, initiate, organize and finish tasks at home and school. The focus will be on how to improve a child's executive function skills. Sarah is a speech pathologist specializing in cognition and attention. She teaches her clients organizational behaviors and then helps them generalize those behaviors in real life.

All workshops and presentations are free and sponsored by the Cohasset PSO/Parent Advisory Council. If you would like to be added to their e-mail network for updates, forward your contact information to southshorepac@comcast.net.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on two roll calls and local representatives' votes on three roll calls from the week of February 4-8.

EDUCATION REORGANIZATION (H 4488)

House 135-19, Senate 33-5, approved Gov. Deval Patrick's 28-page education reorganization plan. The detailed proposal creates an executive office of education that would be run by a new cabinet secretary appointed by the governor. The measure also gives the governor the power to appoint the chair of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees. Supporters said that the package would give the governor more authority and hold him accountable for improving public educational opportunities from early education through college. They noted that it is important to put in place a structure that can coordinate the state's education bureaucracy and ensure that it works to make Massachusetts a leader in education. Opponents said that this package was crafted behind closed doors without input from many legislators and would result in an estimated 30 new employees, a cost of $1.5 million and a bigger, less independent and more politicized education bureaucracy. They noted that the measure is a power grab by Gov. Deval Patrick and might even be part of his desire to ultimately abolish the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) test, stop the expansion of charter schools and use his executive power to bypass the Legislature and allow illegal immigrants to pay the lower in-state college tuition rates. The vote was strictly along party lines. Democrats voted in favor of the plan while Republicans opposed it. (A "Yes" vote is for the reorganization plan. A "No" vote is against it).

EXEMPT SENIORS FROM SOME BANK FEES (H 975)

House 154-0, approved and sent to the Senate a bill exempting seniors over 65 from paying a fee for their bank records when they apply for Medicaid. The state looks at the prior five years of an applicant's bank records in order to verify assets and help determine whether he or she qualifies for Medicaid. Supporters said that the fee is only a few dollars but can make a big difference to seniors who are struggling on fixed incomes. (A "Yes" vote is for waiving the fee).

BAN USE OF DISHWASHER DETERGENTS WITH PHOSPHOROUS (H 4523)

House 154-0, approved a bill banning by July 2010 the use of phosphorous in dishwasher detergents used in household dishwashers. Current law exempts these detergents from the 1994 phosphorous ban on all household cleaning products. Supporters argued that the ban would help reduce the flow of this dangerous substance that causes damage to our rivers and streams. They noted that household dishwashing detergents were exempted from the 1994 law because at that time many people were concerned that dishwashing detergents without phosphorous did not adequately clean dishes and utensils. They said that things have changed and that there is now proof that some dishwashing detergents without phosphorous do in fact clean sufficiently. The Senate has approved a different version of the measure. The House version now goes to the Senate for consideration. (A "Yes" vote is for the ban).

RULING PROHIBITING DEBATE AND A VOTE ON SEX OFFENDER AMENDMENT (S 2472)

Senate 33-5, upheld the ruling of the chair prohibiting debate and a vote on an amendment establishing mandatory minimum sentencing for rape with the use of force of a child and for child pornography crimes. The chair at the time was Sen. Stanley Rosenberg (D-Amherst) who was filling in for Senate President Therese Murray (D-Plymouth). The chair ruled that the amendment, a variation of Jessica's Law, is beyond the scope of a child abuse and neglect bill which was being debated on the Senate floor. The vote was strictly along party lines. Democrats supported the ruling of the chair while Republicans opposed it. Supporters of the chair's ruling said that the amendment clearly goes way beyond the scope of the legislation that was being debated on the floor. Some noted that they support tougher penalties for predators that abuse children but said that separate Jessica's Law proposals are currently in committee and will soon be brought to the Senate floor for debate and a vote. Opponents of the chair's ruling said that the bill being debated would increase prison sentences for the neglect and abuse of children. They argued that the Jessica's Law amendment is clearly related and should be allowed on the floor for debate and a vote. They noted that for years they have unsuccessfully made repeated attempts to get similar Jessica's Law proposals out of committee and onto the Senate floor for a vote. The Senate later postponed until February 26 action on the original bill overhauling the state's system of handling cases of child abuse and neglect. (A "Yes" vote is for the chair's ruling prohibiting the Jessica's Law amendment from being brought up for debate and a vote. A "No" vote is against the chair's ruling and supports allowing the Jessica's Law amendment to be brought up for debate and a vote).

PROMOTE NURSING (S 674) - The House approved a bill creating the Massachusetts Nursing and Allied Health Workforce Development Trust Fund. The fund would be used to increase the number of public and private higher education faculty and students who enter nursing and allied health and to improve education offerings in these fields at state colleges. The measure does not provide any money for the fund but specifies that it would be allowed to accept funding from the Legislature, federal grants, loans and private donations. The Senate has already approved the bill. Additional approval is needed by both branches prior to the proposal going to Gov. Patrick.

INTERFERING WITH TRAINS AND SUBWAYS (H 3498) - The House approved legislation creating a new crime of "interfering with the operation of any train or subway." The measure imposes a range of jail sentences and fines on anyone who shoots at or throws anything at a railroad or subway car, places objects on the tracks or generally interferes with the vehicle's operation.

Perspective on end of water rebate

COMMENTARY

ROBERT HEDLUND

I have secured the support of all 15 Senators whose districts would also benefit from my bill. I also offered testimony before the committee on Natural Resources and Agriculture back on June 25, 2007.

I wanted to take some time to respond directly to the recent news that the water rebate from the state that ratepayers have been benefiting from for the last 10 years was coming to an end.

I believe some historical perspective is important.

In 1996, the Massachusetts-American Water Company (now the Aquarion Water Company) completed a new water treatment facility located at 900 Main Street in Hingham. The company was forced to build the new facility in order to comply with the federal Safe Drinking Water Act. This project cost nearly $40 million and caused residential water bills to increase by about 158 percent.

While the Federal government provided funding to the state to comply with the Safe Drinking Water Act, it did not include funding for private water companies or grandfathered projects. In 1997, Governor Weld filed a bill to establish a state Drinking Water Revolving Fund in order to take advantage of the federal money. However, that bill also did not include private water companies or grandfathered projects, like the Mass.-American Hingham project.

I felt strongly that it was unfair to force my constituents in Hingham and Hull (and later, parts of Cohasset) to foot the entire bill for their new facility while other ratepayers across the state would receive a break through this new program. That is why I offered and successfully pushed through an amendment that established a program for customers of private water companies and grandfathered projects to participate in the Drinking Water Revolving Fund.

My amendment resulted in Mass.-American (now Aquarion) receiving a grant equal to 50 percent of the eligible project costs spread over a 10-year period. My amendment resulted in $80 million in savings for ratepayers across the state, including $13 million in savings for my district alone. The $13 million resulted in a reduction of nearly $100 annually in each residential ratepayer's bill for the past 10 years.

Everyone understood, including the water company executives, that this was a fixed, 10-year grant for a specific project. So the fact that this money will no longer be available to offset water rates should be a surprise to nobody. However, I have still been working hard for more than a year to bring additional relief to Aquarion ratepayers.

I, along with Representative Bradley, have been working with Aquarion officials and the executive director of the Massachusetts Water Pollution Abatement Trust – the group that oversees the grant program – to help find possible solutions. In our research, we soon discovered that the grandfathered projects, such as the Hingham plant, had actually received inequitable aid when compared to subsequent projects. To make a long and complicated story short, projects approved after 1998 received aid in the form of a low-interest loan that factored in both the principal and interest cost of the project. The grant aid given to grandfathered projects did not include reimbursement for interest payments.

Having learned of this inequity, I filed Senate Bill 508, Act Relative to Drinking Water Revolving Fund Equity at the start of the current legislative session, back on Jan. 10, 2007. The bill would basically reimburse the grandfathered projects for a portion of interest payments, thus establishing some equity.

The estimated cost of my bill is about $7.5 million annually for the next five years, with $1.2 million a year directed at Aquarion customers.

I have secured the support of all 15 Senators whose districts would also benefit from my bill. I also offered testimony before the committee on Natural Resources and Agriculture back on June 25, 2007. In October, I was pleased when the Committee voted favorably on my bill. My bill now sits before the Senate Ways and Means Committee for their review. With a $1.3 billion budget deficit being projected by the Democrats, having them support our $7.5 million request is an uphill battle. But it is a battle I will continue to fight.

Finally, I think it is important to note that it is not just Aquarion ratepayers that I have been fighting for as state Senator. Year after year I have successfully co-sponsored budget amendments and fought against governor vetoes to bring sewer rate relief to MWRA customers in my district. For the last four years alone, I have successfully supported more than $70 million in relief to MWRA sewer bills, meaning hundreds of dollars in annual savings to each residential customer.

Robert L. Hedlund is State Senator for the Plymouth/Norfolk District.

HEALTH NOTES

to alleviate flooding of adjacent homes, but also mitigate the damaging peak flows which have caused the most distress in neighborhoods near the downtown.

Best of all, the Stormwater Committee has made recommendations to the Selectmen for an arsenal of other tools for fighting the stormwater threat, none of which will add to the tax base. The Town is already fighting stormwater with drainage improvements being accomplished with drainage changes going on in concert with water and sewer infrastructure improvements. These, together with a stormwater master plan proposed by the Selectmen and funded by available funds, will be used with funds from State grants and Community Preservation funds recently approved to fund the 10 stormwater projects around Jacobs Meadow alluded to earlier.

Along with the work now going on, the Town stormwater program is undergoing a logical change of management. The Board of Health was the logical stuckee when things were in crisis mode. But stormwater mitigation is at best a tangential duty for a Board of Health. After all, Stormwater is an environmental problem. Most towns, depending on their organization, have the Stormwater duties as a part of their Conservation Commission, Planning, DPW or under a Town engineer. For Cohasset, a logical choice appeared to be our Conservation Commission. Accordingly, a Bylaw for the next Town Meeting was drafted and appears to be favored by both the Selectmen and the Advisory Committee. The Bylaw contains a provision for inclusion of members from both the BoH and ConCom plus selected individuals from other committees involved in one way with stormwater, like the Harbor Health committee and an "at-large" citizen. One item, provision for banning illicit discharges now still rests with the BoH because those working with septic systems have found the majority of illicit discharges.

So, in future, the town should have a plan and funding to battle stormwater, but more important a place to go when individuals are confronted by Stormwater problems. For questions call the BoH or the ConCom.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

When school rights trump parents' rights

TO THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE

I am of the view that parents have the duty and responsibility to educate and protect their children and the use the school system to support their efforts. It is evident that the view of the School Committee is that the duty and responsibility for children lay with the schools and parents role is meerly to support the schools.

The School Committee explained, "First of all, the Lewis case was about a student's rights not a parent's right." Are we to understand from this that the parent's rights differ from the rights of their child? One would have to believe that there was a dispute between parent and child, in which the school intervened. This is clearly not the case. The parents have demonstrated a passionate interest in the well being of their son.

The School Committee wrote, "The order of the BSEA was in the child's favor." This comment omits the fact that the order gave the parents the right to remove their child from the special education program. Here is what BSEA said that was omitted from the School Committee's commentary, "Parents have the right to make decisions regarding [their son] including educational decisions to withdrawing [their son] from special education." Your letter would have us believe the outcome of the appeal was something totally different. In fact, the Lewis child was legally removed from special education after the BSEA judgment.

Furthermore, if BSEA action was in favor of the school, why then was it necessary for the school to take out a temporary restraining order against the Lewises to force the child back into the special education program, and seek an alternative finding in Superior Court?

The school community is eager to make excuses. "...we acknowledge that one person responsible for over 200 employees and all the town's school children can't please everybody all the time." No one is talking about "pleasing"; the issue on the table is violating parents' rights.

Who knew what and when did they know it?

TO THE EDITOR:

Taken from another cover up, the question "what did the School Committee know about the Middleboro (federal lawsuit involving the rape of a student by a former teacher) and when did they know it" is most appropriate for Cohasset in 2008. The answer will establish if the School Committee has acted in the best interest of the community. The judgment in hiring the Superintendent and subsequent contract renewal is questionable if these actions were taken with knowledge of the federal case. On the other hand, if the fact was not disclosed, then there was, arguably, a material omission.

Another critical question whether the Superintendent denies responsibility or involvement in the Middleboro case? Such a denial would go a long way to discount the suspicions that have proliferated since news of this case was made public.

Several other questions remain unanswered. Is School Committee concerned about the failure to disclose the Superintendent's involvement in the Middleboro case? Will the School Committee explain the disappearance of three teachers? Are there cover-ups of behavior of persons in a position of trust in Cohasset, similar to the Middleboro situation?

The taxpayers of Cohasset are owed answers to these questions and a full explanation by the School Committee.

Girls win 15 in a row and continue to get better

The Skippers wrapped up their first league title since 1988 with hard work and balanced production from all members of the team.

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Winners of 15 games in a row, the Cohasset High girls basketball team is now 17-2 overall, a remarkable record for a team with such youth. Yet, age is just a number, and these girls are proving that one game at a time.

"It's been unbelievable," said Cohasset coach John LeVangie. "We weren't projected to finish in the top half of our league, to turn it up like they have is just unbelievable."

The Skippers wrapped up their first league title since 1988 with hard work and balanced production from all members of the team. The bench isn't big but it packs some punch, hence the eight starters philosophy. Just another reason Cohasset will be playing some home tournament games this year.

"In practice they just work hard, this team is talented but is probably the hardest working team I've ever had," said LeVangie. "To win 15 games in a row proves that they hard every night."

Sammi Lehr (Jr.), Tori Lehr (So.) and Meredith Kelly (So.) were named to the South Shore League all star team. The Lehr sisters have dominated in the post, each averaging double digits in scoring and regularly grabbing double digits in rebounds. Not to mention their defensive presence down low causes fits for opposing teams.

"They are really consistent," LeVangie said.

Along with Carli Haggerty (Fr.) Cohasset prides itself on a pretty strong Big Three.

Kelly may not score a ton of points but ask area coaches about her presence on the court and you will know why the sophomore was named to the all star team.

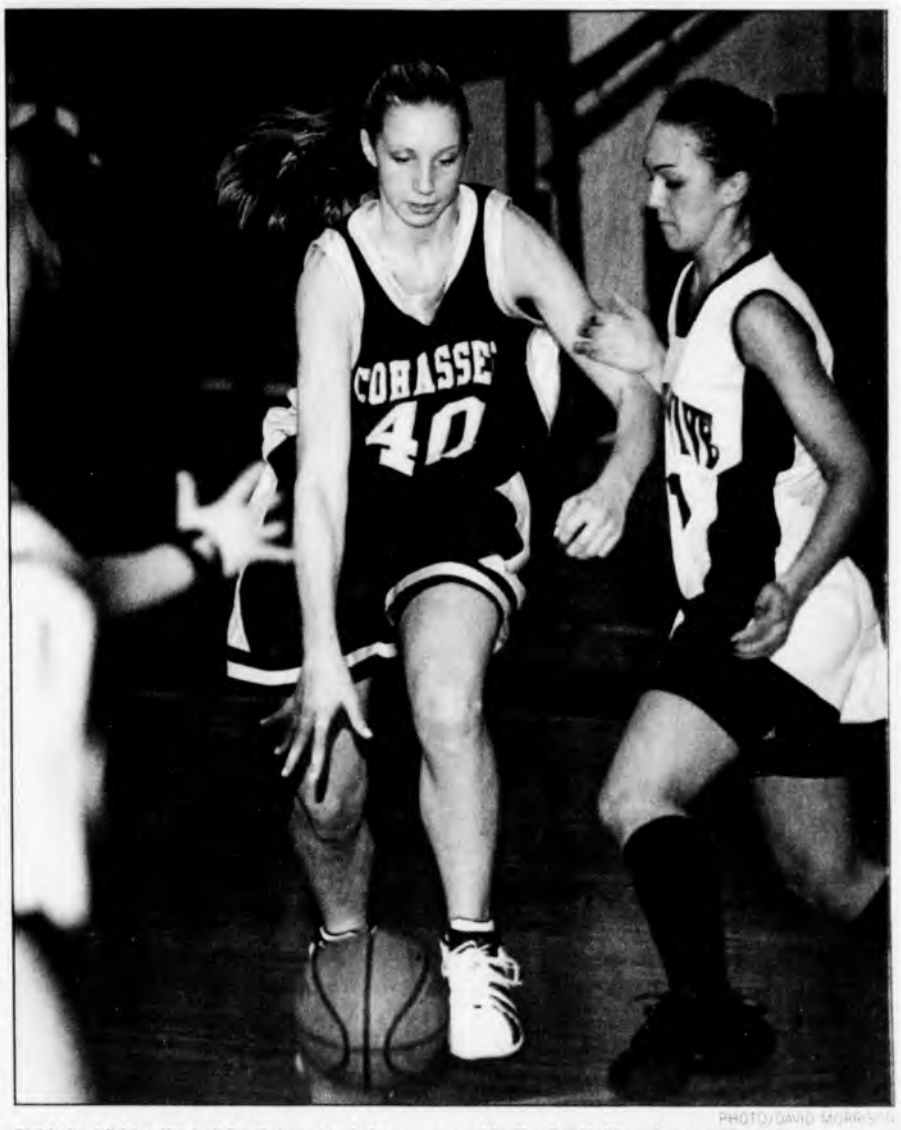
"She gets steals, rebounds, applies pressure she makes us go," LeVangie said.

Kelly along with captains Carly Salerno (Jr.) and Kayla Farren (Jr.) as well as back-up point guard Lindsay Davis (Fr.), spearhead one of the areas best full court presses. That backcourt pressure creates turnovers and provides instant offense.

As for the elder statesmen on the team, Lehr, Salerno and Farren, they have done a remarkable job keeping the girls on track.

"It say's something about them," LeVangie said when asked about not having a single senior on the team. "They make the kids work hard and stay hungry and poised."

Samantha Crough (So.) joins the regular eight man rotation with a nice outside shot.



"She is a shooter," added LeVangie.

Rachel Fredey (Fr.) and Isabelle Franklin (So.) weren't getting minutes earlier in the season but came to play in practice everyday. That hard work now has them in the regular rotation, seeing plenty of quality minutes on the floor.

Skipper notes

Cohasset defeated East Bridgewater 61-30 Wednesday night to finish the SSL slate with a 13-1 record. Tori Lehr scored 16 points while Haggerty added 12. Monday, the Skippers knocked off Cape Cod Tech 57-26. Sammi Lehr scored 17 but the story of the game was Haggerty who hauled down 21

Skippers skid into finish

Boys struggle in second half; Martin named to all star team

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High boys basketball team has dropped eight straight games since winning two in a row in mid-January. The Skippers lost to Mashpee Friday, 72-60, and to East Bridgewater Tuesday, 60-51. Their last win was against the Vikings, January 18.

"We're going through a tough stretch and we are going to have to fight our way through it," Cohasset coach Dorian Bryant said Monday afternoon.

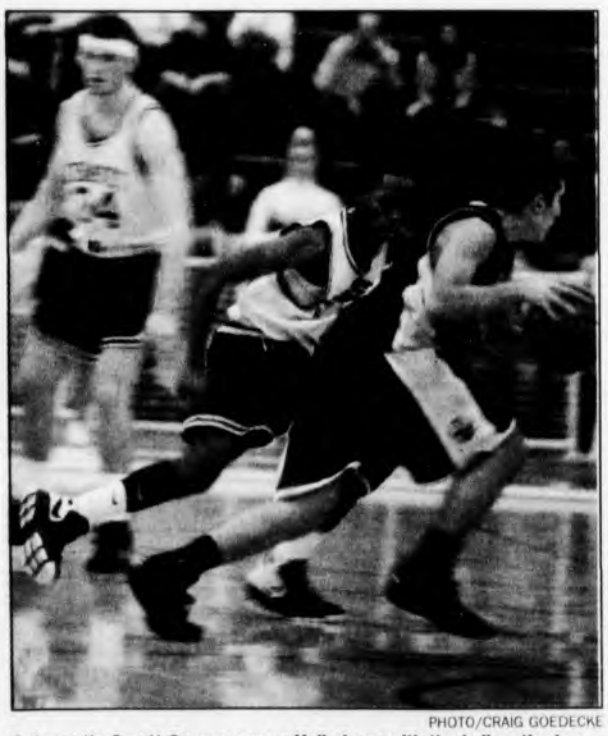
Bryant was speaking about the last two games of the season, an eventual loss to the Vikings and Thursday's South Shore Christian finale, after the Mariner went to press.

"There has been an inability to focus and a lot of work ethic things of that nature," Bryant said.

Turnovers have hurt the Skippers (6-13) over the tough final stretch, something that is difficult for any team to overcome.

"We just have to work on our ball handling and decision making," added Bryant.

Freshman point guard Robert Jones continues to learn on the fly and has handled a very important position on the floor with a coolness usually reserved for an upperclassmen.



"To do what he has done as a freshman is very demanding," Bryant said. "He hasn't seen the game played at that speed before but he is perfect for the position, he doesn't get too high or too low. I think he is going to be a good player."

Despite the losing streak, Bryant is proud of the guys who have finished strong.

"We are still working hard," he said. "Sometimes it just comes down to you are not as good (as the other team), but our guys are still working."

Dan Martin (Jr.) scored 20 points and grabbed nine rebounds against the Hawks Friday. Pat McCarthy (Sr.) added 11 points in the game.

Martin was elected to the SSL all star game that will be played Friday, Feb. 15 at Norwell High School. The girls tip-off at 6:00 p.m. with the boys to follow.

Cohasset Hockey Notebook

The Cohasset High boys hockey team has been busy over the last week. The Skippers most recently defeated Harwich 4-2. Stars of the Game were Brendan Doonan who recorded a hat trick and goalie Jonny Wade.

The goalie match up had two of the South Shore League's all star goalies—Frank Ulsch for Harwich and Wade.

The first period was all Cohasset as they out shot Harwich 18-6 and scored three goals. The first by Brendan Doonan assisted by freshman Anders Goetz at 4:50 of the first period.

"Anders shoveled a rainbow pass to Brendan Doonan coming through the slot and Brendan was able to beat Ulsch," said Cohasset hockey coach Bob Walsh.

Doonan would find the chink in Ulschs' armor two more times.

The second goal, (and first of his high school career), came from sophomore Andy McKenna assisted by senior captain Pat Doonan less than one minute after the goal by the younger Doonan.

Goal number three was a minute and a half later when Brendan Doonan would score assisted by senior captain Alex Goetz ending the first period with the Skippers ahead 3-0.

During the second period, Harwich's Myles Franklin scored at the 11 minute mark

Patriot League Swimming Championships

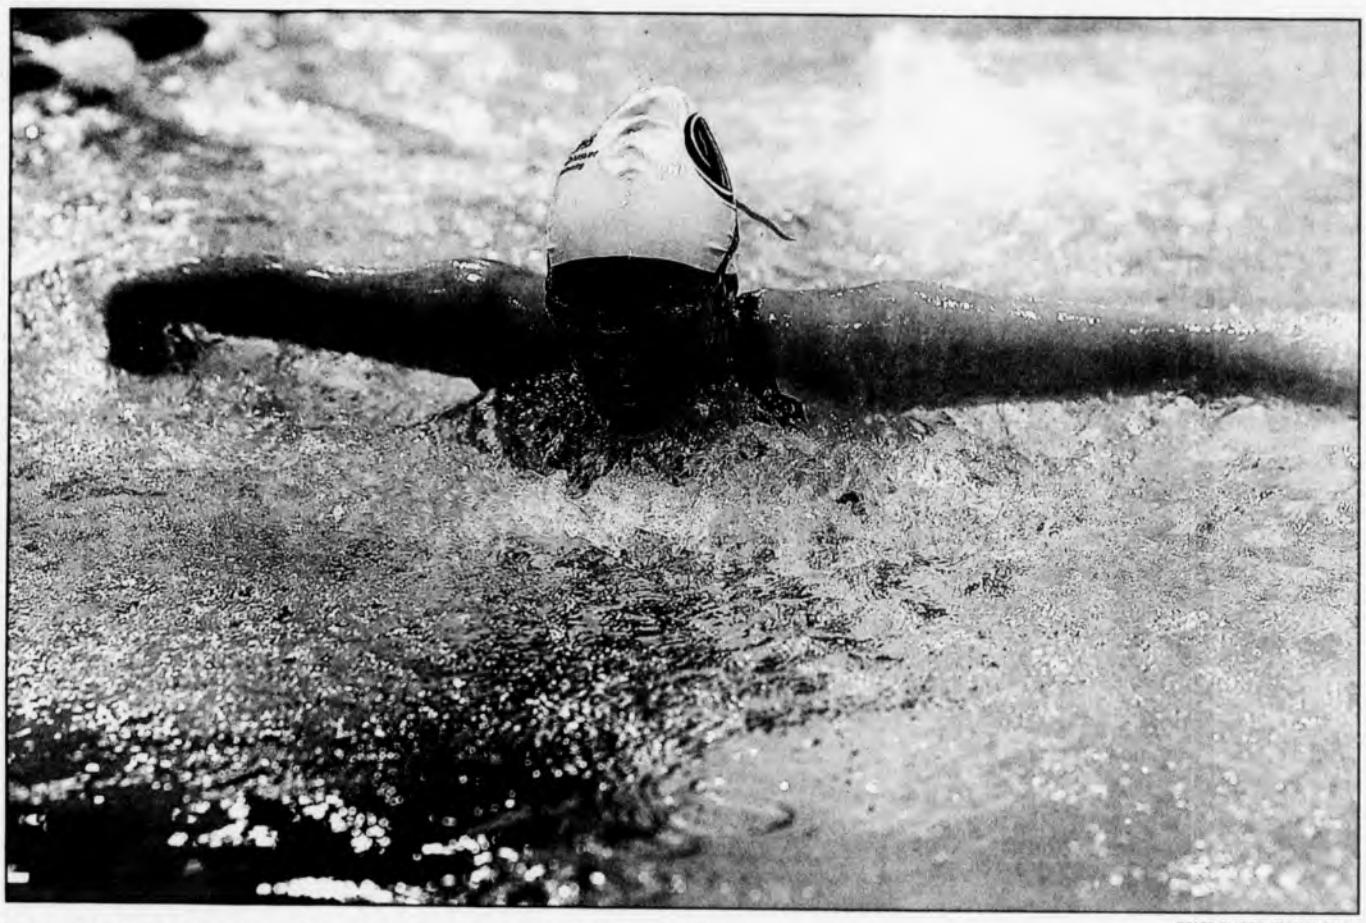
The Cohasset/Scituate boys swim team finished the season undefeated (9-0) and won the Patriot League Championships. It was the first time in 12 years a team other than Duxbury won the league.

The following boys results are from the PL meet. All the boys mentioned were named to the league all star team.

Brian McGuiness (Sr., C) placed first in the 200 freestyle and 500 freestyle. Mike Fassnacht (Jr.) placed first in the 50 freestyle. Mike Wall (Sr.) came in first in the 100 freestyle and third in the100 breaststroke.

Jonny Drybanski (Sr., C) came in second in the 200 individual medley and second in the100 breaststroke. Wes Medwid (Jr.) came in third in diving. Jake Kissick (Fr.) placed third in the 200 individual medley, second in the100 fly. Sean Crowley (Jr.) came in third in the100 backstroke. John McGuiness (So.) placed second in the 200 freestyle.

The Scituate-Cohasset boys won all three relays at the league meet (200 medley relay, 200 free relay and 400 free relay).



The girls finished third in the league this year but had a great league championship finishing second. All the following girls were named to the league all star team.

Betsy Crawford (So.) placed first in diving. Megan Little (So.) came in third in the 50 freestyle and second in the100 freestyle.

Torey Hart (Jr.) placed first in the100 breaststroke.

The Scituate-Cohasset girls placed second in the 200-medley relay, third in the 200 freestyle relays and second in the 400 free relays.

Sectionals are this weekend at MIT. See next week's Cohasset Mariner for in depth coverage of the team, results from sectionals and more on how the boys finally dethroned Duxbury.

Cohasset sixth graders test their skills

The Cohasset sixth graders battled the Patriot League's best recently with back-to-back contests against two powerful clubs from Whitman and Bridgewater. Unfortunately, the results were the same—two losses, but the experience was a triumph in competitive play.

The Cohasset boys came away a little wounded from the tussle with Whitman falling by a wide margin. They returned to their home court in less than 24-hours to force a very talented Bridgewater team to play its best to overcome a tenacious attack from Cohasset that kept the game close.

In the first contest at Whitman the boys struggled. A few rays of hope came from Jack Conte's nice jumper from ten feet. Doug Fitzgerald had some nice shots that danced with the rim. Jack Stanganelli played some tough defense. Joe Buckley played terrific, including four points and multiple rebounds on both ends of the court.

Mark Rattenbury led the team with ten hard fought points.

After the dust settled, Cohasset patched up its wounds and laced up for a rematch against Bridgewater.

Cohasset came ready to play the second time around. With some tough physical defense, and a few wrinkles in the offense to keep Bridgewater guessing all game, Cohasset played well.

Rocco Laugelle moved inside and turned into a lay-up machine. Laugelle had 14 points for an individual season record, including six-for-eight from the line. Chris Haggerty delivered big in the second half with six points from the perimeter. Mark Rattenbury delivered another six points along with some severe punishment down low on both offense and defense.

Brendan O'Connell handled the ball well from the point and added another five-spot with a couple of nice jumpers. Mark McKenna drained one from the key and made some nice deliveries to his big men in the post. Connor Green played terrific defense. Joe Buckley and Timmy Cavanaro added points with some clutch free throws.

Zach Coggins handled the ball well at the guard position and setup some great plays with a crisp passing attack. Henry Brown disrupted Bridgewater's offense on many occasions and had a few nice shots that flirted with the laces.

when, less than two minutes later, Brendan Doonan would score his third of the night unassisted.

Harwich's captain Jake Dumos would score one more for Harwich in the third but Cohasset dominated the play for the rest of the game outshooting Harwich 17-8 in the third period.

The win marks Cohasset's tenth victory in the South Shore League as they finished with a 10-2 record in the SSL. Cohasset is 11-4-3 with two more regular season games to play.

"I'm happy that we've been able to find a way to win games during the season but we still haven't played our best hockey as a complete team," said Walsh. "We've had games where our defense has been great and we've had games where our forwards have dominated, and still other games where our goalie has basically carried the team on his back, but we have not had all three at once.

"We've had a couple of games where we couldn't get out of our own way and ended up shooting ourselves in the foot. On those two occasions, it cost us the chance of winning our league championship. This team knows how to win. I'm proud of their discipline and hard work and I look forward to being there when they put all three components together."

There are about 150 kids that play in the South Shore League. Within the league only 18 are chosen and named to the SSL all star team. This year, four Cohasset players were named to the team, senior captain, Chaz Czerkawski, senior captain, Pat Doonan, senior captain, Frank Wheelwright and junior goalie Jonny Wade.

"The performance of these guys has been unmistakable," added Walsh. "As players, teammates and leaders, these guys create a foundation for the Cohasset High School hockey team. The one other guy who rounds out the group is senior captain, forward, Alex Goetz who was nominated for the all star team. As a coach, I couldn't ask for a greater group of guys—each with their own special piece that creates a cohesive unit to make the chemistry work."

Skippers notes

The boys took one on senior night defeating Rockland 3-2. Paul Pozniak scored the first goal, followed by a pair of Pat Doonan offerings. Cohasset out-shot Rockland 37-31.

"We knew this game was huge for Rockland," said Walsh. "They have only one more game left and they need two points to make the tournament. They're a tough team with some chippy players. Going in, we knew it was going to be hard hitting and hard fought."

Cohasset knocked off Mashpee Sunday 3-2. Pat Doonan scored twice and Czerkawski added the eventual game winner.

"At this point in the season, all the teams play much harder because of the threat of not making a tournament spot," Walsh said.

Cohasset locked up its berth Wednesday night with five games remaining.

"It's good and bad for us," Walsh said. "This is when injuries happen to players because teams become more scrappy with the possibility of elimination. We came out flat in the first period, made some adjustments and progressively got better. In the end, we played pretty well staying out of the box for the most part."

Cohasset will wrap up the season against South Shore Voc-Tech, Saturday, Feb. 16 and Old Rochester, Wednesday, Feb. 20.

Wrestlers fare well at sectionals

Murphy, Froio and Hurlbut all qualify for states

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High wrestling team had five members place at the Division 3 South Sectionals, Saturday at CHS. The Skippers finished out of the mix in terms of a team score, but will send representatives to Wakefield High School for the individuals this weekend.

David Toomey (Jr., C, 145) placed sixth in the tournament going 3-3. He finished 24-12 on the season.

"He really topped off a good year," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney.

Nick Secatore (Sr., C, 171) took fifth place, an alternate spot for states. After missing a month because of injury he returned for the Tri-County match. His return to the team was an obvious boost, as he went 4-2, Saturday, losing to the first and third seed in his weight class.

Mike Froio (Jr., C, 160) finished fourth, qualifying for states. He had wrestled only twice since January 5 and is slowly getting his conditioning back. He went 3-2 at sectionals.

"I'm hoping at states he will be reaching his stride," said Sweeney. Froio is 18-4 on the year.

Stephen Hurlbut (Sr., C, 215) finished in second place.

"He's had a phenomenal season," said Sweeney. Hurlbut is 34-4 this season and won three matches via pin Saturday.

Jack Murphy (So. 119) was the sectional champion. Cousin to former CHS State Champion Nick Cambi, Murphy made the family proud with an exciting performance Saturday.

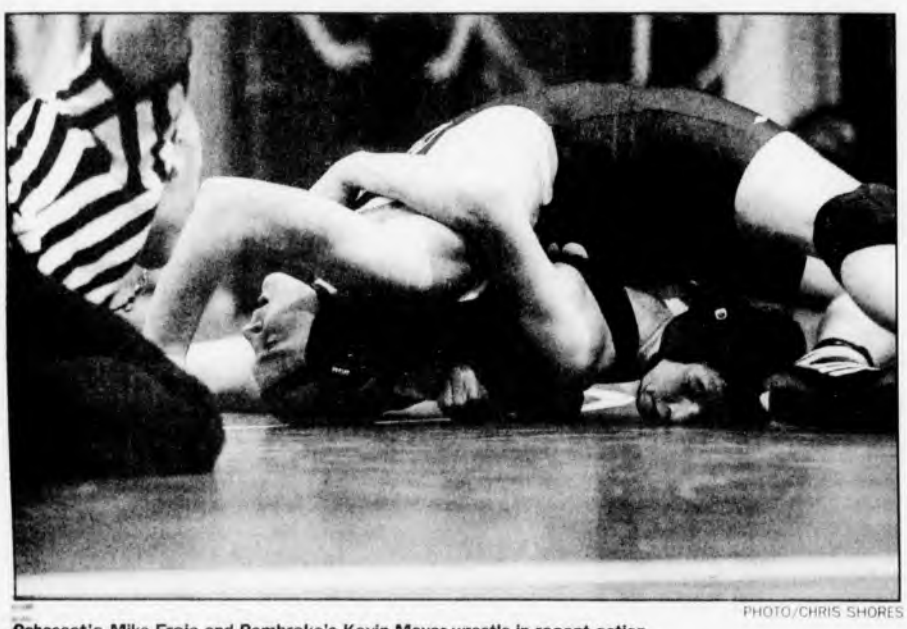
"It was one of the most exciting matches of the night," Sweeney said.

In the championship match, Murphy faced Foxboro's Mike Hayes. Hayes had Murphy on his back twice, Murphy had Hayes on his back twice and the match was even stopped for a bloody nose. Murphy trailed 10-9 at one point.

"I told him the importance of hand control," Sweeney said. Murphy reversed Hayes on the whistle to take an 11-10 lead, cradled him up and pinned him in the second period.

"There wasn't a second where something was not happening in that match," Sweeney said.

Murphy had three pins before the championship match to round out his four-pin night.



"Four pins is pretty impressive," Sweeney added.

Murphy will be a three seed at WHS this weekend, Hurlbut a five seed and Froio a 15 seed.

As for the guys who didn't qualify, Sweeney thinks the future looks bright for the Skippers.

"A lot of young kids had a good season, we should be ready to get it going next year," he said.

See next week's Mariner for a season wrap up and results from individuals.

Softball pitching clinics are open to SSBC member and non-members alike, with different fees, on a first come, first served basis.

Little League Battery Club

South Shore Baseball Club's Little League Battery Club four-week session, for players 8 to 12 and 13 to 15 are slated for Saturday mornings in March and April for ages 8 to 12 and 13 to 15; and Monday and Thursday nights, March 3, 6, 10 and 13, for high school varsity players.

Pitching instruction will concentrate on proper mechanics from the wind-up and stretch, strategy and pitch selection, different grips and its effects on the ball, pick-off moves, fielding, and positive attitude. Catching sessions focus on correct receiving and throwing techniques, pitch selection, blocking low pitches, and overall strategy.

The Cohasset PSO's fourth annual Read-a-thon, has officially begun! Last year, this event raised over $17,000 to benefit the Joseph Osgood, Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle Schools. Participating students from the three schools have set reading goals for the three-week-long event and will be logging their minutes spent reading. At the end of the Read-a-thon, students will collect pledges from the family and friends who have sponsored them. Money raised will support and maintain school enrichment and curriculum programs. The nature theme of this year's Read-a-thon is intended not only to encourage reading, but to inspire the children to respect and appreciate our environment and the great outdoors.

This year's Read-a-thon will run in tandem with the Cohasset Reads Together initiative. The goal of Cohasset Reads Together, sponsored by the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, is to foster a love of reading and a sense of community for all ages. The town-wide book selections are "Walden" by Henry David Thoreau and "A Walk in the Woods" by Bill Bryson. Companion books have been chosen for the elementary schools. At the Joseph Osgood School, students are reading, "Henry Hikes to Fitchburg" by D.B. Johnson, a story about Henry David Thoreau, and "Our Neighbor, Millie" by Alyse Clinton of Hull about the 330-foot wind turbine next to her house. Deer Hill students are reading "Walking with Henry" by Thomas Locker. The Paul Pratt Library and Cohasset Reads Together have generously donated copies of each of these books to classroom teachers.

The 19-day Read-a-thon was kicked off on Feb. 11 at the Joseph Osgood School and the Deer Hill School with a special guest speaker. Megan Connolly, from the Weir River Farm in Hingham, spoke to the students about how many wonderful discoveries can be made by reading, and by enjoying and exploring the outdoors. Megan showed the students some of the unique and special wildlife that we have here in Cohasset. She also discussed how important it is for everyone to respect and care for nature, and to not harm and destroy the plants and wildlife that we may come in contact with. The kickoff at the schools generated a lot of excitement and enthusiasm.

The Mount Washington Hotel in Bretton Woods, New Hampshire, opened in 1902 and originally catered only to summer crowds. Today the resort offers year-round fun with skiing in the colder months and tons of outdoor activities like mountain biking and hiking and golf as the weather warms up.

Erin Clossey
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Bretton Woods, N.H. -

Make no mistake. The impeccably dressed and inscrutably accented maitre d' of The Dining Room at the Mount Washington Hotel will turn away gentlemen who arrive for dinner sans jacket and tie.

After a momentary flush of embarrassment for one such man, my dining companion and I decided we were glad The Dining Room stood on its traditions. We had taken care to bring "evening clothes" (not normally part of our travel accessories), and would have been miffed to find we could've gotten away with less.

The hotel, part of the Mount Washington Resort at Bretton Woods, N.H., and especially The Dining Room, tips a top hat to its former life as a turn-of-the-century mountain refuge for the moneyed and leisured classes. Sitting on stiff-backed chairs under crystal chandeliers, as black-tied servers dodged potted palms and a three-piece orchestra played a staid version of "Summertime," I felt a little like I was dining aboard the Titanic.

A couple takes a stroll along the long warp-around porch at The Mount Washington Hotel in Bretton Woods, New Hampshire.

But those weren't icebergs outside the panoramic windows, they were the Presidential Range - part of New Hampshire's White Mountains - one of the premier recreation areas in the Northeast.

The main attraction of the Mount Washington Resort is the mountains, and they have been since the hotel opened in 1902. In those days, it was exclusively a summer retreat, attracting such notables as President Woodrow Wilson, Thomas Edison and Babe Ruth.

But since the hotel was winterized in 1998-1999 (a little too well - we often broke a sweat walking back from breakfast) it has catered as well to skiers, snowshoers and snowmobilers.

The resort incorporates Bretton Woods, the largest ski area in New Hampshire, with 434 acres of ski and snowboard terrain. There is also a Nordic center with 100 kilometers (about 62 miles) of trails, a skating pond and a tubing hill.

Guests can arrange to go dog sledding, snowmobiling or take a sleigh ride through a setting so beautiful it looks a lot like a 3-D version of a Currier & Ives print.

In addition to the iconic 200-room Mount Washington Hotel - more chateau than chalet with its red-roofed Spanish Renaissance architecture - the resort accommodates guests in The Lodge, a motel near the slopes; the Bretton Arms Inn, a Victorian bed-and-breakfast; and a clutch of townhouses for bigger families with bigger budgets.

Despite the nighttime dress code, it's hardly a stuffy place. After dinner my companion and I headed downstairs at the hotel for a pinot noir-fueled grudge match of air hockey in the hotel arcade. Resort-wear during the day in the winter is mostly snow pants or jeans and fleece.

And what stands out, wherever you go on the resort, is the vast number of kids. Even amid the Gilded Age veneer of the hotel, Mount Washington Resort seems to be most simpatico with families.

At breakfast in the hotel, staff put out a kid-size table of mini-cereals and Froot Loop/marshmallow bars for the young and sweet-toothed set.

A popular activity at the resort is the tubing hill. For $5, you get an enormous inflated doughnut that you drag to the top of a slope and ride down in a giddy whirl.

The downhill ski slopes "make everyone feel like they're a good skier," said Chris Ellms, general manager of Bretton Woods, and that attracts a particular kind of crowd. Bretton Woods prides itself on such top-rated programs as Hobbit Ski and Snowboard School, in the Kids' Alpine Club, and weekly children's apres ski parties. And while there are a fair number of black diamond and double-black diamond trails among the 101 slopes, derring-do just isn't the specialty.

"We can take care of families beautifully. Can we take care of the 25-year-old hotshot? Probably not," Ellms said.

James and Heather Matarazzo and their five kids come up to Bretton Woods from Alton Bay, N.H., to treat themselves, even though they have a ski resort in their "backyard." The long, sloping trails mean everyone in the troupe can have a good time, James Matarazzo said. And the snow at Mount Washington is nearly always plentiful, he added.

The weather was beautiful the weekend we were there. But my companion and I don't downhill ski, and a week of warm temperatures and rain had given the cross-country trails a slick crust of ice that scared us off schussing. Instead, we lashed snowshoes to our boots and set off across the golf course in search of wilderness solitude.

We found it only 10 minutes away from the hotel, along the Ammonoosuc River. The only sound we could hear, apart from the crunch of crampons on crusty snow, was the water gurgling against ice floes. Well, OK, and also our own jabbering about the aloof beauty of the place, and how we should call in sick to work on Monday and try to go dog sledding.

Discovering the Whites

You could stay on the Mount Washington Resort property and still get your fill of rugged mountain beauty. But then you'd miss the northern New Hampshire scenery that has managed to become iconic without turning cliche.

Near the resort the coal-fired Mount Washington Cog Railway takes passengers on abbreviated one-hour winter runs to Upper Waumbek at 4,000 feet. In the summer, the rail goes right up to the summit, and is a popular area attraction (it is not afilliated with the resort).

The Old Man of the Mountain rock formation shuffled off this mortal coil and left Franconia Notch (the ledges that collectively looked like a profile of a face collapsed in 2003). But the notch itself is still distractingly beautiful. You'll pass through the area on I-93 on your way to or from the White Mountains - avail yourself of one of the scenic turnoffs.

For the quintessential New Hampshire village experience, head west on Rte. 302 from the Mount Washington Resort for about a half-hour. Littleton is a pretty little town (get it?) with red brick buildings and a healthy respect for nostalgia. Boutiques and independent bookstores share the main drag with Jax Jr., a two-screen movie theater with roots dating back to the 1920s, and Chutter's General Store, which boasts the "World's Longest Candy Counter."

In nearby Sugar Hill, check out Harman's Cheese & Country Store on Rte. 117 and try a bit of their cheddar (closed Sundays in winter).

Covered bridges are another attraction - there are dozens in the White Mountains region. Find a listing and other New Hampshire travel advice at www.visit-newhampshire.com.

IF YOU go...

STAYING THERE: A standard room at The Mount Washington Hotel (www.brettonwoods.com; 800-314-1752) on a winter weekend is from about $279 per night for a family of four, but there are several packages available that combine meals and skiing. Summer rates are higher - with summertime attractions including golf, tennis and hiking. If your room is on the back of the hotel, be aware construction is under way on a 25,000-square-foot spa expected to open in about a year. Ski-and-stay packages at The Lodge are from $99 per person, per night, based on double occupancy.

DINING THERE: Main courses in The Dining Room at The Mount Washington Hotel range from $23-$33. The wine list is extensive and runs from moderately priced to exorbitant.

SKIING THERE: A full-day weekend lift ticket at Bretton Woods (www.brettonwoods.com) is $69 for adults, $42 for teens, $31 for kids 5-12. A Nordic trail pass is $14 for adults, $11 for teens and $7 for kids. Kids 4 and under ski free with a paying adult.

Ski Museum serves up history and memories

Barbara Radcliffe Rogers
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

IN NEW ENGLAND

Franconia, N.H. -

The Cannon Mountain Aerial Tramway in New Hampshire's Franconia Notch carried some of America's first skiers to the top of the mountain, so its base is a fitting location for a museum dedicated to the history of downhill skiing.

The New England Ski Museum documents the sport with permanent collections of vintage equipment, skiwear and art, along with exhibits on the World War II 10th Mountain Division, the "ski troopers." Changing special exhibits focus on subjects that might range from the first ski trail to the current feature on the creation of the National Ski Patrol.

The museum's collections are presented in displays that show skiing not only from its technical aspect with the evolution of equipment, but from its aesthetic, nostalgic and even whimsical side. Skirts worn by the Women's Olympic team in the 1930s join historic skis and bindings in the displays.

Ski legend Hannes Schneider, visitors learn, had begun popularizing recreational skiing in the Austrian Alps even before his arrest by the Nazis and subsequent emigration to North Conway, N.H. His small following of European skiers were called schnee hasen - snow bunnies - and an artist created cartoon rabbits shown in one of the earliest ski posters, surrounding Schneider on a mountainside.

In addition to the films presented with the current ski patrol exhibit, documentaries about ski history are shown continuously in the museum's theater. These films of early skiers remind viewers just how far the sport has come from the days of long, straight wooden skis to the turn-carving parabolic skis of today. And the clips of great - and not so great - racers are fun to watch.

America's first alpine ski trail was opened in 1933 at Cannon Mountain - it was created by a Russian Duke. And the Cannon Mountain Aerial Tramway opened in 1938 so skiers could ascend the mountain in 20 minutes instead of a climb of several hours. One of the original cars, replaced by much larger ones in 1980, is displayed outside the museum, within sight of the current tramway to make the size comparison even more dramatic.

For lifelong skiers, the museum is a trip down a memory trail; for non-skiers, it's an interesting look at New England history.

The New England Ski Museum, Franconia, N.H. (www.skimuseum.org), is located at the base of the Cannon Mountain Aerial Tramway. Open daily 10-5. Admission is free.

Saying 'I love you' with a song

Singing Valentines convey heartfelt messages

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Roses, chocolates, and sentimental greeting cards are all part of a traditional Valentine's Day celebration.

Add to that a "Singing Valentine" delivered right to your sweetheart's door by a tuxedo-clad barbershop quartet. Who could ask for more?

For the past 12 years, fun-loving members of the South Shore Men of Harmony Barbershop Chorus have arrived unannounced on numerous doorsteps or at offices, classrooms, banks, restaurants, or any place on the South Shore during Valentine's Day week to regale special someones (male or female) with "The Song of the Rose" ("Heart of My Heart, I Love You") and "I Love You Truly." They then present a long-stemmed red rose and a lovely Valentine naming the thoughtful sender and leave behind a photo of the delightful experience as a souvenir. Each year, the demand grows.

This activity is part of a nationwide program offered by the group's parent organization, The Barbershop Harmony Society. "Hundreds of quartets from more than 800 choruses throughout the country sing their hearts out, bringing pleasure to people of all ages who receive these expressions of love and caring," said SSMH member Bill Fitzgerald, who organizes the program for the South Shore barbershoppers from his Weymouth home and is sometimes part of a quartet. "The many deliveries to residents of nursing homes and shut-ins are especially meaningful and touching." Often the recipients of these one-of-a-kind Valentines join the quartet in songs of days gone by.

Proceeds primarily support the Youth Outreach Music Program offered in some South Shore schools to promote vocal music education. This is accomplished by familiarizing students with the "songs and melodies that represent America's vast and varied musical heritage," according to Fitzgerald.

He recalls with amusement the time a few years ago when despite extensive publicity about the "Singing Valentine" program and a well-placed feature story in a local publication, Fitzgerald hadn't received any inquiries.

Then, at the end of the week, he got a call from a woman on the classified advertising staff of a local newspaper that had run the group's ad. She asked if he was the contact person for the "Singing Valentines."

The caller told him that a woman named Mary had just returned home from vacation to find 15 calls on her answering machine requesting more information about "Singing Valentines." As it turns out, Fitzgerald's telephone number had been printed incorrectly in the newspaper. She wanted to know who Fitzgerald was and how to get in touch with him.

The ad representative put Fitzgerald in touch with Mary, who patiently relayed the messages to him. She facetiously dubbed herself his "secretary" and called every few days to pass along more misdirected messages. It turned out that her phone number was just one digit different from Fitzgerald's.

"Out of gratitude, we decided to include Mary and her husband, Ed [whose name was listed in the phone book], among the happy recipients on that Valentine's Day," Fitzgerald said. However, several attempts to find Mary at home were unsuccessful.

"Still, I was pleased that the number of singing valentines we delivered that year exceeded the previous years' totals," he said.

Following a meaningful two days of bringing happiness to others, the quartet passed by Mary's house one more time and "lo and behold, there was a car in the driveway!" Fitzgerald said.

The men, dressed in black tuxedos and red bow ties, approached the house with their one remaining rose hoping to find the couple at home.

"Mary opened the door in astonishment, both smiling and crying after greeting her visitors, realizing who they were but never expecting such a surprise," Fitzgerald said.

Sadly, Mary explained that she had just returned from visiting the grave of her husband, who had passed away the previous year.

"They had spent many happy years together, had a wonderful family, and she had wished him a 'Happy Valentine's Day' along with her prayers before returning home," Fitzgerald said. "This quartet of gentlemen was able to deliver Valentine's wishes to Mary on Ed's behalf by singing 'Heart of My Heart, I love You' and 'I Love You Truly.' This is a most memorable Valentine story."

The SSMH, which sings both old standards and contemporary songs, welcomes new members. They meet – and sing together — Tuesday evenings at the Hingham Community Center from 8 to 10:30 p.m. The group is available for bookings, including at churches (they also have a religious/spiritual repertoire). For further information, call (781) 337-SING or send an email to: messages@southshoremenofharmony.org.

Happy Valentine's Day!

Did you know that:

- The oldest known Valentine's Day card was created in 1415 and is on display at the British Museum in London.
- About 1 billion Valentine's Day cards are sent to a "special someone" every year, second only to the number of Christmas greetings — and women purchase about 85 percent of them, according to the Greeting Card Association.
- The first commercial Valentine's Day greeting cards in the United States were produced by Esther A. Howland in the 1840s. She is known as the "Mother of the Valentine."
- Valentine's Day is celebrated in the United States, Canada, Mexico, and Australia.

"Roses are Red, Violets are Blue, Friday is here.... WAHOO!"

Happy belated Valentine's Day readers. Hopefully, no one forgot to give their significant others that special V-day gift, whether it be heart shaped chocolates from CVS or roses from Shaws, it was better to give "thriftily" than to own up to the mistake! Oddly enough, the students this week acted as though there was no vacation next week.... could they have been suffering from severe premature sugar crashes? I guess candy hearts and tasteless chocolates can do that to a kid.

Also of note; multiple weeks of intense work paid off on Thursday with the successful sale of the winter_Spinnaker: Great job to everyone involved. ...You guys should be proud of yourselves! The paper marked the last issue involving the first semester Journalism students, however as of now, the editors remain the same for the remainder of the year. Readers of The Spinnaker can look forward to the new styles and flavours of the second semester writers in the spring issue, which will also be the final installment of this year's newspaper.

Well, moving on, it is time for the rundown of the week!

- Monday, Feb. 11: Bitterly cold weather clearly didn't prevent CHS students from attending school.
- Tuesday, Feb. 12: The varsity basketball team laced up their high-tops to play against East Bridgewater's team. Sadly, these short shorts wearing guys were unable to defeat EB. At least they lost in style!
- Wednesday, Feb. 13: Secret Admirers were given the chance to finally show their special someone some love, thanks to the sale of student council's Valentine candy grams!
- Thursday, Feb. 14: Aside from Cupid having worked his busiest day, students also kicked it into high gear selling and purchasing the school paper while trying to maintain a stable blood sugar level!
- Friday, Feb. 15: 2 pm marked the beginning of a well needed vacation!

That's it for me this week. Have a happy and safe week!

'We can change the world'

By Sarah Brown
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Reprinted From the Valentines Issue of The Spinnaker.

On the afternoon of Thursday, Jan. 31, Doctor Anne Thomae, a science teacher at Cohasset High School, stood confidently behind the podium of the crowded school auditorium. The sounds of the rap song "Climate Control Jam" blared through the loudspeakers while a slideshow depicting students sorting CMHS trash played behind her. As the music faded and the curious crowd soon quieted, Thomae proudly announced, "We are Cohasset. We can change the world." And so began Focus the Nation Day.

We, as people inhabiting the Earth, currently stand at a critical moment in human history. The decisions we make in the next few years regarding the health of the environment could possibly make or break our future. These decisions will have far-reaching and irreversible impacts on the lives of today's students and the lives of their children. Ms. Patricia McGrail, another environmentally active science teacher at the high school, told her students, "You are the future CEO's, parents, political leaders, teachers, and citizens. Therefore, you must be able to understand how the world works and the impact humans have upon the natural world in order to make educated choices throughout your lives."

Focus the Nation holds true to this concept. It is an organization which concentrates on global warming solutions for America; the members have been creating dialogues at over a thousand colleges, high schools, places of worship, civic organizations and businesses, and directly engaging millions of students and citizens with the nation's decision-makers.

The idea of Focus the Nation Day is essentially just that: focus. Almost everyone is aware of the issue of global warming, yet it unfortunately continues to remain on the backburner. If we all took one day out of our busy schedules and devoted our combined energies to raising awareness about global warming, perhaps then we could take action. As the mission statement of Focus the Nation ambitiously claims, "Our intent is to move America beyond the fatalism to a determination to face up to this civilizational challenge, the challenge of our generation."

Therefore, the students of Cohasset High School participated in Focus the Nation Day.

During Focus the Nation Day seniors Jen Silvia and Sarah Brown give a presentation of things they found in the town landfill that could have been recycled.

Almost everyone is aware of the issue of global warming, yet it unfortunately continues to remain on the backburner.

Senior Evan Deutsch, the president of the Environmental Club who plans to major in Environmental Studies at Middlebury next year, presented the idea to the student club. Deutsch and Thomae, the faculty advisor to the Environmental Club, worked incredibly hard to make the concept a reality. Thomae noted, "As a scientist and informed citizen, I have known the facts about human impact on climate change for a long time. When Evan suggested that the Environmental Club should participate, I saw it as a great opportunity to get the word out." And getting the word out is exactly what the presentation achieved.

After Thomae's opening remarks, the student body attentively listened to two presentations by their peers. The first was a summary of a trash audit performed last spring by the juniors of Thomae's AP Chemistry class. Sarah Brown and Jen Silvia, both now seniors, described the experiment to the student body; the students had brought one day's worth of CHS trash to the dump and sorted through it with hockey sticks to analyze how much of the total volume was actually non-recyclable waste. The students concluded that two thirds of the volume could have been recycled, and also emphasized the monetary benefits of recycling. They proposed that if proper recycling were implemented at the high school, the town, which funds the school's trash disposal system, could cut the current cost in half. The presenters continued to emphasize what the students as individuals could achieve, as not everyone could relate to the bigger picture. Silvia noted, "We are not asking for recycling to be your top priority. We are simply asking that when given the choice between a trash can and a recycling bin, please do the right thing and recycle." The other students who were involved with the trash audit last June were Cam Cope, Ryan Crough, Ian Cundall, Chloe Koines, and Maura Regan, all now seniors.

The second presentation was an informative slideshow about an organic garden, which seniors Conor Michaud and Emerson Oronte designed as an Independent Study Project. They educated the students on the importance of organic foods, and demonstrated that through eating organic, people may help the environment and also become healthier. McGrail served as the advisor of the Independent Study. She notes, "From the stage it appeared that the students were engaged and listening. At the very least, the presenters have planted the seeds of knowledge and awareness. I am quite sure they have had an impact on the behavior of many of their peers."

Focus the Nation Day culminated in a speech by Massachusetts Senator Robert Hedlund. Hedlund was able to offer a political perspective on the issue of global warming, and truly captivated the audience. Thomae was delighted with his contribution to the assembly. "He provided many interesting facts and anecdotes. There is too much partisanship in politics these days so I found it important that he is a Republican voicing a so-called 'Democratic' position. Clearly, this issue obscures party lines." McGrail, too, was impressed with Hedlund's honesty about "the lack of progress on environmental issues."

Focus the Nation Day was an incredibly successful event for CHS, but the true success is in the hands of the students. You now hold the information to truly make a difference in the environment, but what can you, as individuals, do to help? Thomae proposes it is a combination of trivial and essential steps. Drive electric cars or small cars with good gas mileage. Or how about forget the car, and bike, walk, or use public transportation. Conserve all of your resources. Don't run the water while you brush your teeth. Recycle at school and at home. Make parents sign up for the alternative energy plan through National Grid, our electric company. Conserve all resources.

Clearly, education and raising awareness can only go so far. The next step is action, and that is entirely up to the Cohasset community. Thomae said it best in her opening remarks: "We are Cohasset. We can change the world."

Integrated Preschool

Applications for the Cohasset Integrated Preschool are available at both Osgood School and the Student Services Office at Cohasset Middle High School. Children must be 3 years old by Sept. 1, 2008 to participate in the morning class and 4 years old by Sept. 1, 2008 to participate in the afternoon class.

Applications should be returned to the Student Services Office at 143 Pond St., no later than Friday, Feb. 15. The lottery will be held Monday, Feb. 25, and families will be notified by mail that week.

A deposit of $75 is due by Monday, March 10, to hold the space. Tuition is currently $1,500 for the year, which includes four days of 2.5-hour sessions each school week, but is subject to change by the school committee.

Kindergarten registration is ongoing

Kindergarten registration for the 2008-2009 school year has begun. Registration will be at Osgood School, daily, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Parents will be asked to indicate interest in full-day kindergarten or half-time kindergarten at the time or registration. Parents are also encouraged to register early to facilitate planning for programs.

Children who turn 5 on or before Sept. 1, 2008, are eligible to attend kindergarten. A birth certificate and proof of residency are required in order to register.

For more information, call Osgood School at 781-383-6117.

Youth Ministry to host family event

A special evening, sponsored by the St. Anthony and St. Paul Youth Ministry, will take place Saturday, March 1. There will be a presentation and reflection by the Youth Ministry group on last summer's trip to New Orleans and the upcoming trip to Louisville, Ken. See what the youth of both parishes are doing for those less fortunate.

This is sure to be an uplifting and fun event, so gather family and friends to attend. There will be food, silent auction and raffles.

For tickets and information, contact Bette Baker at 781-383-7310 or betbaker@Comcast.net; Lindsey Watson at 781-749-7310, boomerw@comcast.net; or youth minister Bill Mezzetti at 781-589-0911, billmezzetti@yahoo.com.

Manners make a difference at SSCC

Knowing the correct thing to do in any social situation, whether it is at the dinner table, introducing parents to teachers or simply answering the telephone, will benefit a child throughout his/her entire life. "Children learn by example," said Renate Devin, founder and president of Boston School of Etiquette. "We know that parents believe teaching children social skills is a vital part of parenting. But we, as parents, also recognize that many times it is the influence of another voice that reaches our children."

The etiquette program offered at SSCC includes table manners, communication skills and social graces. "We want every child to feel special and important so each class has a beautiful set table with fresh flowers, china, crystal and delicious food," said Devin. "The pride you see on their faces is wonderful!" Deborah Donahue has her two oldest children enrolled in the current class. She said, "My kids look forward to every class. They are having fun learning good manners while experimenting with different food."

Social graces are needed at the dinner table.

Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St. 781-383-0808. Interim Pastor: Richard Chamberlain; Please join us for Sunday Service and Sunday School at 10 a.m. followed by fellowship in Merritt Hall. Accepting donations of new socks for homeless shelters and non-perishable food items for local food pantries.

Bible Study series continues on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Practical Christianity. Some Christians commonly view the Old Testament as a storybook-full of fascinating tales, yet ancient and irrelevant to modern reality. This exceptional 10-week study from Insight For Living with Chuck Swindoll will help you blow the dust off these timeworn chronicles and discover enduring truths that relate directly to you, while translating into reliable patterns for godly living. Experience familiar passages as never before, and find fresh inspiration in the memorable scenes revisited. Follow the examples of faithful Old Testament heroes such as Abraham, Joseph, David, and many others as you learn to apply timeless biblical principles to your everyday life. Please join us.

Our mission statement is: "Equipping God's people for living out the Good News to be the hands, feet, voice and heart of Christ in our community and in the world." How should we accomplish this? Come hear sermons to find out.

First Parish Unitarian Universalist on Cohasset Common, 23 North Main St. (Parish House). 781-383-1100. www.firstparishcohasset.org Minister: the Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull. Interim Director of Religious Education: Jim FitzGerald. Music Director: Allegra Martin. Interim Organists: Carolyn Bates and Maureen Hague. Parish Administrator: Sandy Bailey. Parish Committee Chair: Mary Parker.

We welcome all to our inclusive spiritual community. We affirm our Unitarian Universalist Principles and put them into action by worshiping together, caring for one another, and working for a safe, just, and sustainable world.

Sunday, Feb. 17

8 a.m. - Circle Ministry in the Parish House/Atkinson Room - Group led by Joan Kovach and Susan Meikleham and meeting 1st and 3rd Sundays)

10 a.m. – Worship in the Meeting House – "Seasoned Love"

Religious education classes for toddlers, children and youth and childcare for our youngest begin at 10 a.m. in the Parish House.

Everyone is invited for refreshments and fellowship in the Parish House directly after the service and RE classes.

Let's remember that there are folks on the South Shore without the resources to buy food and basic household items! Let's fill the baskets in the entry to our Parish House with items that will go directly to our Cohasset Food Pantry for those among us in need. Suggested items include: concentrated juices, beef stew, spaghetti sauce, clam chowder, tissues, shampoo, and dish and laundy detergent.

All are welcome as we worship and learn and live our faith together! To learn more about First Parish Unitarian Universalist, please come by the Parish House and pick up or sign up for the current monthly newsletter, The Common, or visit our website at www.firstparishcohasset.org or contact Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull, Minister, at 781-383-1100.

Reverend Tutu speaks at Abbey

The Glastonbury Abbey continues its inter-religious lecture series, "Listening to Other Voices – Prophets of Compassion: Who Cares," with the Rev. Mpho A. Tuto, who will present "Pilgrims on this Earthly Journey: We Who Must Care," at 7:15 p.m., Thursday, Feb. 28, in the Glastonbury Conference Center at 16 Hull St. in Hingham.

The Rev. Mpho A. Tutu has taught, studied, ministered and preached in a variety of venues as diverse as Worcester and Grahamstown, South Africa. At varying times, she has worked with children, seminarians, mothers, and rape survivors and their families. From her personal experience, she knows well the matter of pilgrims, and those who must care. An Episcopal priest, she now serves as Assisting Priest at Holy Comforter Episcopal Church in Washington, D.C. She is the founder and Executive Director of the Tutu Institute for Prayer and Pilgrimage. Daughter of Archbishop Desmond Tutu, she served for five years as the director of the Bishop Desmond Tutu Southern African Refugee Scholarship Fund to provide full four-year college scholarships to refugees from South Africa and Namibia.

Reservations are recommended. For more information or to make reservations, call 781-749-2155. The lecture series is free, however donations are gratefully accepted. For more information on Glastonbury Abbey, visit www.glastonburyabbey.org.

Program on Israel

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom and AIPAC invite the public to a special adult education program featuring Yaakov Katz, military correspondent and defense analyst for the Jerusalem Post, at 7:30 p.m., on Thursday, Feb. 28, at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham. Refreshments will be served.

Katz's presentation will focus on Israel's security situation a year after the Lebanon War, and Israel's current strategic assessments with a particular look at the threats from Syria, Iran and Hezbollah. Katz's presentation will also tackle the differences between Israel and United States intelligence on the Iranian threat, and Israel's various options. This is of particular importance given the recent release of the threat assessment concerning Iran's nuclear program.

Register by Monday, Feb. 25, by calling the temple office at 781-749-8103 or by emailing CSSADM@AOL.COM.

St. Joseph Retreat Center events

St. Joseph Retreat Center, 339 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset will host the following upcoming programs: Feb. 15 to 23: The Retreat Center is available for one, three, or seven days/nights of directed or private prayer; and Sunday, Feb. 24: A Day of Prayer for Men and Women Living with HIV. For more information and to register, visit www.csjretreatcenter.org or call 781-383-6024.

Business Notes

Campbell elected trustee of Mass. Bar Foundation

At its recent Annual Meeting, the Massachusetts Bar Foundation elected Cohasset resident, Richard P. Campbell, to its Board of Trustees.

Founded in 1964, the Massachusetts Bar Foundation (MBF) is the philanthropic partner of the Massachusetts Bar Association. Through its grant making and charitable activities, the MBF works to increase access to justice for all Massachusetts citizens. In 2007, the MBF IOLTA Grants Program awarded 144 grants, totaling approximately $4.5 million to legal aid programs across Massachusetts

Campbell is the founder and a shareholder of Campbell Campbell Edwards & Conroy. He is a Fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers and is certified as a Civil Trial Advocate by the National Board of Trial Advocacy. After graduating from the University of Massachusetts, Campbell earned his law degree, cum laude, from Boston College Law School. In 1995, Boston College Law School presented him with its highest award, the Founder's Medal, for his achievements and dedication to the law. He currently serves as Chair of the Board of Overseers for Boston College Law School.

As trustee of the Massachusetts Bar Foundation, Campbell will be part of a 20-member board charged with overseeing the operations and charitable activities of the Foundation. He will serve his term as trustee through January, 2012.

For information about the Massachusetts Bar Foundation, visit:

www.MassBarFoundation.org.

Rockland Trust announces Teller of the Year

Janet Trask, Cohasset head teller, was named Rockland Trust's Teller of the Year for 2007. Trask was selected from a pool of 225 tellers at the bank.

She joined Rockland Trust in 1990, and does an exemplary job as head teller in the bank's Cohasset branch. Her positive attitude and pleasant personality provide a friendly branch environment for both customers and her fellow employees. She resides in Cohasset.

Old Ship Coffeehouse features Jake Armerding

Jake Armerding will perform at the Old Ship Coffeehouse off the Square on Saturday, Feb. 16, at 8 p.m.

After growing up with Vivaldi and bluegrass, by the seventh grade Armerding was playing in his father Taylor's bluegrass band, Northern Lights. He has gone on to develop his own seamless blend of folk and bluegrass. He is also a first-rate fiddler and mandolin player.

The Coffeehouse off the Square is at Old Ship Church Parish Hall, 107 Main St., Hingham Square, just up from Loring Hall Theater. Admission is $10 at the door; no reservations.

...by the seventh grade Armerding was playing in his father Taylor's bluegrass band, Northern Lights.

The concert begins with an open mike at 8 p.m. Beverages and desserts are 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee. For more information or to volunteer, which provides free admission, call 781-749-1767.

Lisa DiTullio celebrates release of her first book

A reception and book signing event was held Feb. 7 for Cohasset resident Lisa DiTullio, who just released her first book, "Simple Solutions: How Enterprise Project Management Supported Harvard Pilgrim Health Care's Journey from Near Collapse to #1."

DiTullio, principal of Lisa DiTullio & Associates, said, "I am thrilled and honored to celebrate the release of my book with so many colleagues, associates, friends and family." She added, "Many of the people here tonight have been influential in my success and have reinforced my professional goals through ongoing encouragement and support."

The event honoring Ms. DiTullio was held at the Alumni House at Curry College in Milton.

About Simple Solutions

Simple Solutions shares the simple project management practices that were used to turn the Boston-based health insurance company around. The author presents simple practices and shares real-life perspectives from key business stakeholders within Harvard Pilgrim Health Care, all of whom participated in the company's success. Copies are available by visiting www.lisaditullio.com.

About Lisa DiTullio & Associates

Lisa DiTullio & Associates is a South Shore-based consulting group that provides expertise in the set up, management, and continuous improvement of Enterprise Project Management Office models. In addition to working with companies seeking better project management practices, Lisa DiTullio is also a renowned international speaker on this topic. A leading force in project management, she is the editor of ProjectBestPractices, a quarterly newsletter from ProjectWorld and a contributor to PM Network Magazine. Bikram Yoga classes to start

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces it will offer Bikram Yoga Classes, taught by National licensed Master Yoga Teacher, Katrina Klein, of Bikram Yoga South Shore. The six-week program, for youths 7 through 13, will be held from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m., from Wednesday, Feb. 27 through April 2. They will take place in the second level, west wing of the Bikram Yoga Studio at 380 Chief Justice Cushing Highway in Cohasset.

Bikram Yoga focuses on physical flexibility, coordination and strength of mind and body. Many studies have shown that children who practice yoga often experience increased self-esteem and are better able to cope with stress. Yoga reduces sports injuries and stress, both physically and mentally.

The fee is $70 per person. Participants need to bring a mat and water to each class. For more information or to register, visit www.BikramYogaCohasset.com or the Cohasset Recreation Department at Cohasset Town Hall. Class size is limited, so early registration is advised.

CAMP, SCHOOL AND ACTIVITIES DIRECTORY

BOSTON-BASED CHILD DEVELOPMENT EXPERT, DR. DAVID ELKIND, URGES PARENTS TO ADD MORE PLAY TO THEIR CHILDREN'S LIVES

"The traditional summer camp recognizes that play is a powerful form of learning that contributes mightily to the child's healthy physical, emotional, social, and intellectual development."

American children seem to be in constant motion – their schedules packed with homework, chores, music lessons, and organized sports. With a lack of time for good, old-fashioned play for children, Tufts University child development expert Dr. David Elkind warns in his book, The Power of Play: How Spontaneous, Imaginative Activities Lead to Happier and Healthier Children, that there can be health and psychological consequences.

The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) concurs with Dr. Elkind. In a recent report written in defense of play and in response to forces threatening free play and unscheduled time, AAP concludes free and unstructured play is healthy and – in fact – essential for helping children reach important social, emotional, and cognitive developmental milestones as well as helping them manage stress and become resilient. In fact, 25 to 30 percent of children in grades one to six get fifteen minutes or less of recess a day.

In a world where kids do not always get to be kids, the American Camp Association (ACA) meets the developmental needs of children by providing:

- Opportunities for unstructured play
- Experiential learning and experiences
- Opportunities for healthy, safe risk-taking
- An "unplugged" environment
- A community that includes caring adults

Summer camps accredited by the American Camp Association offer day and overnight experiences for children that maximize opportunities to play in a tremendous variety of ways. From free play to performing plays, from intense athletic contests to non-competitive games, opportunities for play are paramount at camp. Camps and ACA form a partnership that promotes summers of growth and fun in an environment committed to safety.

Menopause: 'We're all in this together'

The musical returns to Boston's Stuart Street Playhouse

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Most women would run in the other direction rather than go through menopause more than once, but not Mary Callanan. The actress and singer says she is delighted to be back in "Menopause: The Musical," now in its return engagement at Boston's Stuart Street Playhouse – just don't ask her if she relates to the show's theme.

"I refuse to ever admit to the condition, but I will admit to the musical," said Callanan with a laugh recently from her home in Weymouth. "I love doing this show and I'm delighted we're back in Boston. We have a new director, Michael Larson, and a new choreographer, Daria Melendes, and we've made some changes to the show to make it even better than people remember."

Callanan herself hasn't had to reach too far back for memories of the musical by writer and producer Jeanie Linders which puts parody lyrics to familiar songs from the 1960s and '70s to celebrate women who are on the brink of, in the middle of, or have survived "the change." Since the musical concluded its first two-year run in Boston in May 2006, Callanan has appeared in Florida and Denver productions of "Menopause" as one of four women with nothing in common who quite literally bump into each other at a Bloomingdale's lingerie sale. Before long, the newly minted quartet bonds over their shared experiences with memory loss, hot flashes, night sweats, wrinkles, late-night chocolate binges, Botox injections, too little sex, too much sex, and much, much more. As "Earth Mother," Callanan plays a lost-in-the-past free-love generation hippie, and someone whose back story Callanan has herself enhanced with local flavor.

"The way I see her, she is the daughter of well-to-do people from Chestnut Hill. After being educated at Wellesley College, she moved to Vermont where she made a fortune making cheese, but she is still a hippie and probably always will be."

The show's other characters include a professional woman, an Iowa housewife and a soap star being played by Boston theater favorite Kathy St. George who, along with Callanan, is the only holdover from the show's original Boston company.

"I'm so glad to be back onstage with Kathy St. George. Kathy and I are old friends and we love working together. We call each other ham and cheese, because we work so well together. We have the same comic sensibility and really enjoy each other's company when we're doing a show and when we're not."

For many years now, theater audiences have enjoyed keeping company with Callanan, who has appeared in the sit-down runs of "Nunsense," "Nunsense II" and "Nuncrackers" at Boston's Theatre Lobby; the national tour of "The Sound of Music" with Marie Osmond; and alongside Joanne Worley in Reagle Players' production of "Hello, Dolly!" in Waltham. The veteran performer believes her latest assignment will also have broad appeal.

"People love this show and some will see it over and over, bringing new friends along with them each time. We call them 'Menopause Heads,' because like 'Dead Heads' with The Grateful Dead, they just can't get enough of this show. We're expecting plenty of repeat business from our loyal fans and lots of new business, too," says Callanan. "This show has a simple message: 'I'm okay, you're okay. It's going to happen to us no matter what so let's just accept that we're all in this together.' I always tell women that if you're not having a good time with menopause and your husband isn't either, then bring him along with you to the theater. It will be a release for you and a relief for those who love you."

"Menopause: The Musical" is at the Stuart Street Playhouse, 200 Stuart St., Boston. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 800-447-7400, or go online at stuartstreetplayhouse.com.

A bill before the Legislature recognizes that public safety on Massachusetts roads has taken a "back seat" to inconsiderate drivers who text message on their cell phones while driving.

Jury out on cell phone ban

House likes bill, Senate stalls it

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Ever been stopped for "DWT" (driving while texting)? How about "DWC" (driving while calling)?

If the state House of Representatives has its way, then Massachusetts residents could join motorists in many other states in facing fines and "surchargeable" offenses if they are caught using a hand-held cell phone or text messaging while driving.

But House Bill #4477 is facing resistance in the Senate and may not come up for discussion.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund explained that Senate leadership has not given any indication it intends to bring it up for debate and has not put the bill on the calendar. If it is not taken up by July 31 – the chances of the bill gaining any traction are nil.

"I don't like the bill," said Hedlund, who represents Cohasset and seven other South Shore towns. "But I have no problem doing what I am paid to do and have it come up for debate."

Hedlund's objection to the legislation is making cell phone use "surchargeable" — a provision that he describes as a "kiss for the insurance companies" that would benefit from higher rates.

"I am an avid cyclist and am more cognizant than most of the potential threat from some elderly drivers, young drivers and distracted drivers," he said. "I do not have an objection to restrictions – it is the insurance surcharge that completely turns me off."

He explained there is already a law on the books that police can use to stop motorists for using a cell phone. The "impeded operation" law requires the user of a CB radio or cell phone keep one hand on the steering wheel.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, who represents Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and one precinct in Scituate, says while there are already laws dealing with distracted driving – the level of cell phone use while operating a motor vehicle puts it into in a class of its own.

"The level of people utilizing cell phones while driving is so great – that it needs special classification," Bradley said. "That is why I voted for the bill."

Bradley joined 106 other representatives from across the Commonwealth in voting for a bill last month that

Abutters seek sewer plant fix

Want hold on new tie-ins to system

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset knows it has a stormwater problem. Flooded basements and streets are the norm whenever there is a heavy rainfall. The Stormwater Committee is actively seeking both physical and regulatory ways to alleviate the problem, which has been exacerbated by increased development throughout town. Town Meeting funded a Flood Control Master Plan to identify solutions to the pervasive town-wide problem.

But, the town's stormwater issues never seem to come into focus more plainly than when the Wastewater Treatment Plant has an overflow. After a day of heavy downpours last Wednesday, Feb. 20, the influx of water became so great the Wastewater Treatment Plant could no longer handle the hydraulic flow and began to overflow.

Abutters on Elm Street have raised concerns in light of the latest overflow about whether the plant is able to take on the 450 homes scheduled to tie-in to the plant from the Little Harbor district. A group of residents plan to request the Sewer Commission at its meeting Monday Feb. 25 to put all new tie-ins on hold until the town addresses the stormwater issues that lead to the sewer overflows.

"The town frankly needs to fix the problem. This is a problem that has been misdiagnosed, overlooked or put lower on the priority list. We just want the town to fix it," said Joe Coggins of 57 Elm Street. The overflow water

The Best & The Brightest

We at Community Newspaper Company know there are many bright, talented and caring young people in our communities and, once again, we are sponsoring "The Best & The Brightest," a program developed to celebrate their accomplishments.

Do you know an individual between the ages of 16 and 21 who should be honored for academic achievement, volunteerism, athletic prowess, artistic acumen or the pursuit of excellence in another field? Look for the nomination form on Page 23 in this issue. Nomination forms will run for several weeks.

A selection committee, comprising local educators, businessmen and community members, will read each nomination form and choose the area's best and brightest teens and young adults.

This spring, your newspaper will include "The Best & The Brightest," a special section devoted to sharing as many of the stories and photographs of those nominated as possible.

We look forward to receiving your nominations by March 31 and hope you'll share in our excitement to recognize these outstanding individuals.

DEP grant for Cohasset

Cohasset was among the 161 towns awarded a portion of the Department of Environmental Protection's funding for fiscal year 2008 to be used towards climate change, sustainability, and pollution prevention.

The funding will support innovative efforts to save energy, throw away less, recycle and compost more, eliminate hazardous materials from school facilities and grounds, and reduce people's exposure to air pollution from excessive idling of bus, car, and truck engines.

Cohasset was awarded $17,050 to assist with its "Daylighting and Gasoline Efficiency Project," which stands to be an example both within and outside the community as to the importance of being more environmentally aware.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley said, "I am glad to see that The DEP has recognized the work that Cohasset has put in to make their town greener and more sustainable. These funds will be instrumental in continuing those efforts."

"There are few long-term issues bigger and more important than becoming better stewards of the environment," Sen. Robert Hedlund said. "We all have a role to play, whether as consumers, heads of households, or local leaders. I am pleased that the state has recognized the efforts being undertaken by Cohasset."

Legislature OKs water sale bill

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset was the envy of neighboring towns last summer when the majority of its residents did not have to endure a water ban. Now, Cohasset Water will have the power to share their water wealth with other municipalities and water companies.

A bill, which got its start at the 2007 Annual Town Meeting, passed through the State House and Senate last week. Under the legislation, Cohasset is allowed to sell up to 50 percent of its safe yield, or about 2 million gallons of water a day, either by entering into long-term contracts up to 20 years or by emergency circumstance.

A water department's safe yield figure is the amount of water that a department can pump daily without threatening the long-term health of the water supply. The Cohasset water system is provided with about 4 million gallons of water per day, an EPA certified number compiled from 40 years of rain data.

The town consumes approximately 800,000 gallons per day and projections indicate that number will not go significantly higher, said Water Commissioner John McNabb.

"We have more water than we are using," said McNabb. In recent years, Hingham and Scituate have been struggling to meet their water needs and this past summer had months long water bans.

McNabb said selling water to Aquarion Water Company, which services North Cohasset and Hingham households, would involve little upfront cost, "we have the booster station and the pipelines in place."

"It offers a significant savings for the Cohasset rate payer and will help neighboring communities by providing a needed resource," said state Rep. Garrett Bradley, "it's a win for all involved."

Revenue gained from wholesale water sale contracts would go directly back into improvements and maintenance of the Cohasset system.

"Every dollar the water department gets from water sale will be used to improve the system and that's a dollar we don't have to get from the Cohasset water users," said McNabb.

The bill was filed as a home-rule petition following a vote at the March 31, 2007 Annual Town Meeting. Long standing legislation requires state approval whenever a community wants to displace its own aquifer to another community. The bill received final House approval on Feb. 13 and Senate approval the following day. Governor Deval Patrick is expected to sign the bill this week.

"This bill should help provide some additional relief for Cohasset rate payers," said state Sen. Bob Hedlund. "More than anything I think this bill represents the town's commitment and ability to protect its water supply."

Leading up to and on the floor of Town Meeting last year concerns were raised over ensuring the contracts to sell water had checks and balances. The Water Commission will be limited by the provision that the aggregate of the contracts may not exceed half of the daily safe yield. In addition, contracts will not take effect without Town Meeting approval.

Before the bill passed, the legislation enabled the Commission to only sell water to private parties or private homes, not other municipalities or other water companies. Cohasset took advantage of this legislation by negotiating a 20-year contract to provide water to the Linden Ponds development in South Hingham.

At full build-out the Commission will provide approximately 306,000 gallons per day to the complex. During the last calendar year, the water department took in $200,000 in revenue under the Linden Ponds contract. When the senior housing complex is fully built out the deal will bring $600,000 in revenue annually.

Car crashes into front door of bank

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

This was at least the fourth incident of cars being driven into buildings in Cohasset over the past decade.

A 77-year-old Cohasset woman driving a 2000 Chrysler Sebring convertible told police her foot slipped off the brake and onto the accelerator causing the car to crash into the Bank of America last week.

The accident resulted in considerable damage to the front doors in the entryway of the bank that is located in Shaw's Plaza, 765 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. The doors had to be boarded up, police said.

The building inspector was contacted and deemed the building was structurally sound and the Chrysler was towed from the scene.

There were no injuries. The woman had no driving infractions and was not cited.

"It appears to have been an unfortunate incident," Lt. William Quigley said. "It was just an accident. The driver was not impaired in any way."

This was at least the fourth incident of cars being driven into buildings in Cohasset over the past decade. Previous incidents included Cohasset News, Tedeschi's and Darilynn's – all located in Cohasset Village. Earlier this month, a 76-year-old Hingham woman drove into the side of the Hingham Post Office off Fearing Road. She told police she accidentally hit the gas pedal.

Other accidents

• A deer darted in front of a police cruiser at about 1 a.m. Monday (Feb. 18) on North Main Street near Wheelwright Park causing about $1500 damage to the patrol car. The cruiser was not drivable. The officer was not heading to a call and was not injured. The deer was killed. Police have had to put the department SUV into service while the cruiser is being repaired. Police have four marked cruisers. There are as many as 20 deer versus car accidents annually in Cohasset, police said. The cruiser driver's side fender, headlight assembly, door and bumper need to be replaced or repaired.

• A 1988 Mack truck operated by a 57-year-old Bridgewater man tipped onto its side while trying to remove construction debris from a dumpster at a Jerusalem Road house that is under construction. The incident occurred at about 4:15 p.m. on Monday (Feb. 11). The truck apparently shifted due to ice and the frozen ground and overturned. A tow truck was called to pull the truck back up. There was no property damage and no injuries. There was a small diesel oil spill that was cleaned up by the fire department. The DEP (Department of Environmental Protection) was also notified.

• Snowy road conditions were the apparent cause of a car sliding into a guardrail at about 9:40 p.m. on Tuesday (Feb. 12) near the intersection of Jerusalem Road and Bow Street. Police were able to push the 2000 Mitsubishi Eclipse, driven by a 50-year-old Hull woman, off the guardrail. There was minor damage to the guardrail and the car, police said.

• A school bus backed into a fire hydrant at the DPW garage last Wednesday (Feb. 13) and snapped it off, police said. School buses park at the DPW garage and the driver was backing up and positioning the bus when the mishap occurred. The top of the hydrant was constructed to break away.

• An operator of a pizza delivery run failed to stop at the stop sign at Spring and South Main streets and hit a 2003 Honda Civic that was traveling on S. Main, police said. The accident occurred at about 6:30 p.m. on Saturday (Feb. 16). A 23-year-old Scituate man was driving a 1998 Jeep Cherokee heading out of Spring over to Summer Street and did not stop. He was cited for failure to stop at a stop sign. There were no injuries but the Honda Civic had to be towed.

• A tow truck had to be called to tow a 2007 Toyota Camry, driven by a 71-year-old Cohasset woman, off a wall at about 7:35 p.m. on Saturday (Feb. 16). The woman backed into the wall, which is across from her residence and got stuck on the wall. The car was drivable.

OUI arrest

A 53-year-old Cohasset woman is facing the charge of operating under the influence of alcohol (second offense) after police made a traffic stop Wednesday (Feb. 13) at about 6:30 p.m. Police said an officer on traffic detail near Linden Drive during the flooding of last week's rainstorm saw a 2003 BMW approaching at greater speed than other cars. He directed the car through the standing water but then it started to speed. The officer got into the cruiser and stopped the car at Jerusalem Road and Jerusalem Road Drive. The woman failed field sobriety tests and was placed under arrest for OUI. She was also charged with negligent operation of a motor vehicle; marked lanes violation and speeding in violation of special regulation.

Suspended license

An officer recognized a motorist who had a suspended license and pulled the car over at about 6:10 p.m. Thursday (Feb. 14). Police receive a list every week from the Registry of Motor Vehicles with names of those whose licenses have been suspended. The 23-year-old Cohasset man was driving a 1994 Ford pickup, which was towed. He was charged with operating on a suspended license, operating with a suspended registration, and driving an uninsured motor vehicle.

Lost car

An 83-year-old Cohasset man reported that his 2006 Chevy Impala had been stolen out of Shaw's parking lot last week. As it turned out, the man went in a different door than he exited, lost his bearings and could not find his car. Police put out a radio description of the car that was cancelled. Lt. Bill Quigley explained that police will put out a call right away if a car is suspected as stolen so an opportunity to find the car is not missed. The radio call can easily be cancelled, he said.

Car not stolen

A man who winters in Florida reported that his vehicle was not in his driveway and was stolen. However, further investigation revealed lack of communication among family members who were taking care of the house. The car had been borrowed by a family member, police said.

Homeless man

A man whose last known address was in Scituate but is now homeless was held in the police lockup over the long holiday weekend after being arrested on a probation warrant Saturday. The 32-year-old was walking on Oak Street. He was taken to court on Tuesday.

Beer cooler

Police recovered bolt cutters from the scene of an apparent attempted break-in to the beer cooler that is under an overhang at the Red Lion Inn. A 9-1-1 caller, who is an employee at the inn, reported two juveniles breaking and entering the cooler at about 11:23 p.m. on Saturday (Feb. 16). Detectives are processing the bolt cutters for prints, police said. The teens were wearing hooded Northface jackets, with the hoods pulled tight over their heads.

brings partially treated sewage into the flooded backyards of Elm Street residents, "it's a health issue."

A combination of a high flow of stormwater and faulty infrastructure (cracked pipes and inflow and infiltration issues primarily in the Central District) left the plant unable to systematically process the wastewater. When the plant can no longer handle the flow of water in the typical process through the plant, water begins to go into an anoxic tank. The tank is designed to disinfect the water with chlorine tablets then when the water becomes too much the overflow spills into the wastewater treatment plant and Jacob's Meadow.

A similar overflow event occurred on Patriot's Day (April 16, 2007) stirring up discussion and calls for action from immediate abutters. According to Sewer Commission chairman Sean Cunning, this overflow was significantly smaller than the one on Patriot's Day last spring or before that, the Mother's Day storm in 2006.

Cunning said the most recent overflow amount was 10,000 gallons compared to last April's 80,000 gallons.

"Unfortunately, [the Sewer Commission] looks like the bad guys again," said Cunning in a phone interview, but is confident the ongoing plant upgrades, including a state-of-the-art membrane system and an extreme flow pipe, will put an end to further overflow incidents.

However, Coggins said the bigger issue is the stormwater that comes down the James Brook corridor and empties to Jacob's Meadow, which continues to stress the plant, "as a result the sewer plant is not completing its job."

Despite assurances of increased communication between the Sewer Commission and the abutters after last spring's incident, notification of the overflow was delayed.

According to Cunning, the overflow began around 8:30p.m., after a long day of heavy rainfall. Around 9:30p.m. Cunning received a call from an Elm Street abutter about the overflow. The abutter said he heard water overflowing from the anoxic tank. Cunning went down to the plant where he found the two plant operators frantically attending to the overflow.

After last spring Patriot's Day overflow, the Sewer Commission met with abutters to have an open discussion about the overflow and what the Commission was doing to deal with the issue. One of the key items to come out of the meeting was to increase communication between the abutters and the commission. A notification protocol was set forth to ensure James Meadow abutters were given immediate warning in the event of an overflow.

According to the notification protocol, when there is an overflow event, the plant operators are supposed to immediately contact the Sewer Commission chairman (Sean Cunning) who in turn contacts Kathy Crosby of 75 Elm Street, then a Connect-CTY blast message is distributed to households in the Jacob's Meadow area. The message informs residents to keep adults, kids and pets away from the Jacob's Meadow area for the next few days.

The flow of notification stumbled at the first step. Cunning said the operators had the overflow largely contained to the building until shortly before 8:30p.m. when the plant could no longer handle the inflow of water. When the water began spilling over the anoxic tank, the plant operators were focused on the containing and disinfecting of the overflowing effluent.

When Cunning arrived at the Wastewater Treatment Plant, he talked with the operators and abutter. Cunning said the overflow was contained around 10p.m. The Connect-CTY message was distributed to 285 homes in the Jacob's Meadow area shortly after 10:30p.m.

Big problem

Much like the overflows are indicative of a pervasive stormwater problem, the delayed notification is only the small issue for abutters in a greater lack of communication throughout the town.

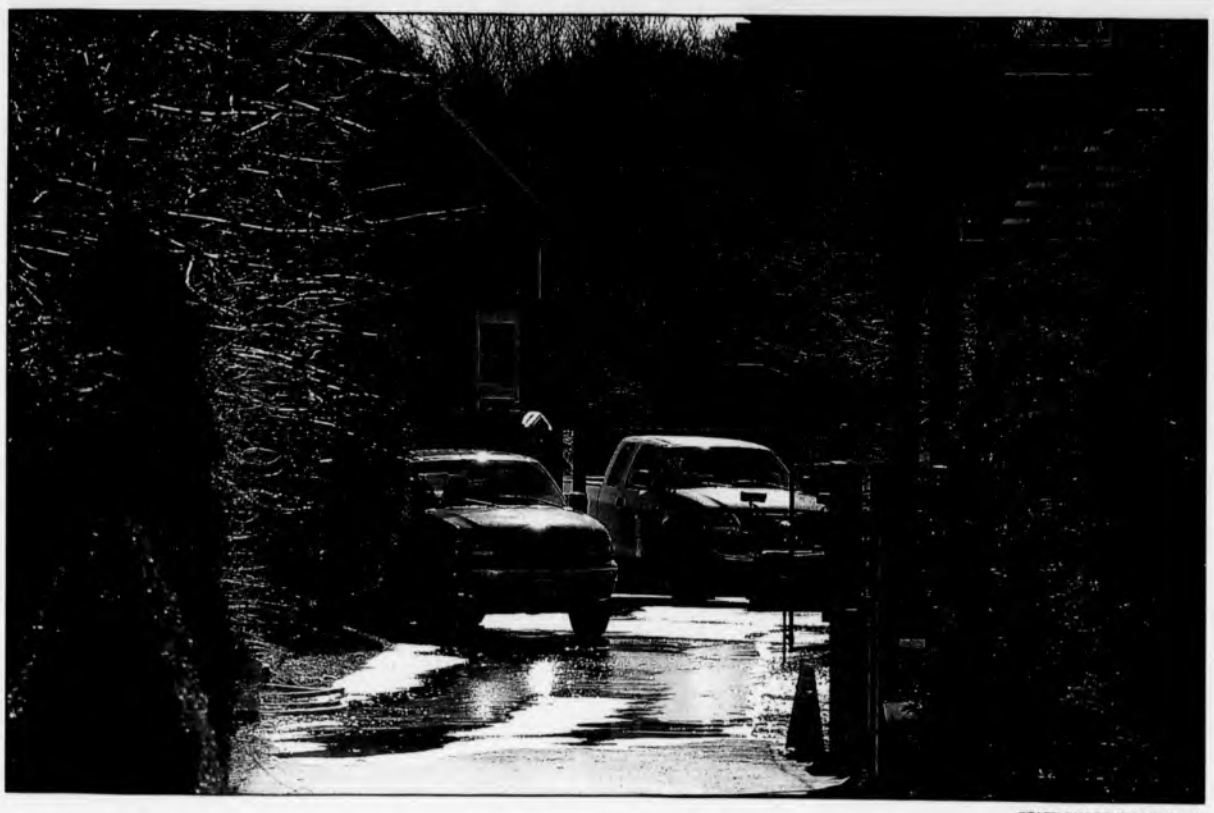
"We as abutters end up running from board to board," said Coggins, whether it is the Sewer Commission or the Harbor Health Committee, the Board of Selectmen or the Stormwater Committee.

"It's coming together" but at a snail's pace, said Coggins. Each board's issues directly affect another's issues, he said.

Coggins said past engineering studies directed the town to install a retention pond upstream of James Brook to enable to slow the flow of water to Jacob's Meadow. Yet, a retention pond was never installed.

"The town has done nothing to fix the problem," said Coggins.

Coupled with the overflows is severe flooding in the backyards of home on Elm Street. Past action to alleviate flooding in other areas of town could have increased flooding in Jacob's Meadow. Elm Street residents have told the Board of Selectmen at previous meetings their flooding issues have increased considerably in recent years.



Measures to alleviate flooding near the post office on Ripley Road after severe flooding in 1996 strategies were developed to address flooding along James Brook. It included work at the upper end near King Street as well as at the lower end in the village using Greenbush mitigation funds. MBTA construction could have contributed to flooding issues as well.

Right now, a town-wide flood control master plan is being drawn up by Coughlin Environmental Services. Principal engineer Dan Coughlin said the master plan is still in its early stages, but is planning to have an interim report for Annual Town Meeting with the final report due in the summer. The plan will identify and outline possible solutions for flood control throughout town, but it may take years for solutions to be implemented.

Coughlin said a retention pond or storage area to delay peak flows down into the Jacob's Meadow system is just one of the options the town could implement to alleviate the Jacob's Meadow problem.

But until the stormwater issues are addressed, Coggins and other residents are concerned more households taxing the wastewater treatment plant will exacerbate the current issues.

"Why continue going forward with enhancements when they can't even get the situation they have handled?" said Coggins, "the burden is being put on the abutters of James Brook and Jacob's Meadow."

Water covers the driveway leading to the water treatment plant off Elm Street last week after the plant overflowed following a heavy rainstorm. A group of residents plan to request the Sewer Commission at its meeting Monday Feb. 25 to put all new tie-ins on hold until the town addresses the stormwater issues that lead to the sewer overflows.

A group of abutters plan to attend Monday's Sewer Commission meeting to request all hook-ups to the system be delayed until the persistent stormwater and flooding issues are addressed.

The Town of Cohasset is under a state mandate to have the 485 Little Harbor homes hooked up to town sewer by 2012.

"The town frankly needs to fix the problem. This is a problem that has been misdiagnosed, overlooked or put lower on the priority list."
— Joe Coggins, 57 Elm St.

Plant upgrades

The Wastewater Treatment Plant is currently undergoing a significant upgrade in conjunction with the Little Harbor sewer expansion project. After last spring's overflow, the scheduled plant upgrades, particularly the installation of an extreme flow pipe, were moved up in the calendar.

"We targeted the extreme flow control pipe as a primary element," said Dan Coughlin of Coughlin Environmental Services, the Sewer Commission's consultant and engineering firm overseeing the Little Harbor sewer project. The cost for the plant upgrades is about $2.5 million.

The extreme flow pipe is about six weeks from completion; it should be up in running for April's notorious showers. The goal with the extreme flow pipe is to improve the quality of effluent as it leaves the plant.

"When flows are high from localized flooding and stormwater flow, 80 to 90 percent of the water coming into the plant can be rainwater during those periods," said Coughlin. Currently in an overflow event the water is partially treated by chlorine tabs at the anoxic tank.

With the extreme flow pipe the excess flow, primarily rainwater, will be directed to an UV light chamber, where it will be disinfected. The wastewater that has gone through the plant and membranes will then mix with the wastewater from the UV chamber and travel to the harbor for discharge. The wastewater will be in compliance with environmental standards. The installation of the extreme flow pipe will reduce the likelihood of sewage overflow into Jacobs Meadow like what happened last week, said Coughlin.

By the fall, the remainder of the upgrade components, including a state of the art membrane system, should be installed making the extreme flow pipe an emergency, safety net feature for the system, Coughlin said. The plant upgrade needs to be done in certain phases because the plant must remain functional during the duration of construction.

The Little Harbor sewer project will bring an additional 150,000 gallons of wastewater through the plant each day. Accordingly, the upgrade is designed to handle approximately 450,000 gallons of water per day, but will have the capacity to handle two million gallons, explained Coughlin, widening the buffer between normal capacity and peak flow capacity.

Plant upgrades are to be complete in the fall and new tie-ins not scheduled to at the earliest mid-2009, "at that point in time we will have gone through a full springtime with the membranes in place," said Coughlin. The operational time will allow the system to be thoroughly tested to ensure it can handle both the 450 additional Little Harbor homes and extreme flows caused by intense rainfall.

"With the upgrade of the plant, the new membranes and the overflow pipe, I think we'll be good," affirmed Cunning.

Town Census forms sent to households

The Town Census for 2008 was mailed to each household the week of Jan.21. Information obtained from the census is ultimately used to prepare the street list, annual registry of voters, school list, dog owner list and jury list. It also establishes eligibility for resident's tuition at state colleges, veteran reimbursement, senior citizen programs and other benefits. The census provides information to various departments throughout the town.

Dog forms are on a tear-off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 2008. Dog forms need to be returned as soon as possible with a current rabies certificate although some residents may have recently renewed the 2007 license.

Anyone who did not receive the census should call the Town Clerk's office at 781-383-4100.

Sustainable Cohasset to host meetings

Sustainable Cohasset will host a showing of the award-winning NOVA documentary "Dimming the Sun." The film begins with a United States scientist's unexpected observation of a 3-degree increase in temperature ranges when all air traffic is frozen and contrails disappear from the sky immediately following Sept. 11. With all the intrigue of a good murder mystery, the film then systematically explores worldwide meteorology studies to find an explanation for the post Sept. 11 phenomena and reaches some startling conclusions.

Join Sustainable Cohasset for this 56-minute film at 7 p.m., on Monday, Feb. 25, at Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Additionally, all green book and blog lovers are welcome to join Sustainable Cohasset in an open discussion of green literature and/or movies at the regular meeting at 7:30 p.m., on Feb. 26, in the Atkinson Room at First Parish Church, 25 North Main St.

Some of the titles to be discussed are Barbara Kingsolver's "Animal, Plant and Mineral," Cormac McCarthy's "The Road," Alan Weiseman's "World Without Us" and Michael Pollan's "In Defense of Food." All are welcome. Refreshments will be served.

Only one race in town election

Two vie for Sewer Commission seat

In Cohasset, it is very unusual for open seats on the Board of Selectmen and School Committee to go unchallenged.

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Election season has officially begun. A sole race has surfaced as two residents have returned nomination papers to run for one Sewer Commission seat.

For the past two years, candidates for town election positions have been slim. In 2007, although all seats had a candidate there were no races for positions on any of the town committees. This year, one seat remains without a candidate and one seat is contested.

The deadline to return nomination papers passed on Tuesday and George Haley, who had pulled papers to run for one of three seats on the Board of Library Trustees, was the only candidate not to return papers. The Town Clerk has certified the signatures on the nomination paper and all candidates are good to go.

James Dow of 502 North Main St. and Wayne Sawchuk of 432 Beechwood St. are candidates for one open Sewer Commission seat. Sitting member Ray Kasperowicz is not seeking re-election.

In Cohasset, it is very unusual for open seats on the Board of Selectmen and School Committee to go unchallenged. But, this year neither committee has a contested race.

Two seats on the Board of Selectmen are up for re-election and two candidates have come forth. Selectman Fred Koed is looking to retain his seat for a fourth term, while Karen Quigley of 27 Clay Spring Road is running to fill the other open seat. Selectmen chairman Gary Vanderweil is not seeking re-election.

Incumbent School Committee candidate Alfred Slanetz is running unopposed for a second three-year term. Slanetz said not having a contended race makes his campaign significantly easier, "it's a sad statement for the town, we need good people to step up and serve the community."

Quigley agrees, "Quite frankly I'm baffled," she said, "I hope it doesn't signify anything other than people are happy with the candidates that have come forward."

While Sawchuk does have a contender in his quest for a Sewer Commission seat, he said the sheer amount of time and effort involved in campaigning and then participating on a town committee could be keeping people from putting their hat in the ring.

"The work you have to do to get on [a committee] that involves hard work to begin with may deter people. You have to get some personal satisfaction that you are doing something good for community," said Sawchuk, "I'd like to see every position have at least two candidates."

Although the majority of positions are not contested, Cohasset learned in last year's town election an uncontested race doesn't necessarily translate in to a walk in the park. In the 2007 Town Election, an 11th-hour write-in candidate Lucia Flibotte beat out the balloted candidate Peter Richardsson for a seat on the School Committee.

"It's something I'm aware of and know there is always a possibility it could happen," said Quigley. That said she feels like she has broad support from all different sectors in the community, "I'm going to continue to be active, attend meetings, reach out to voters if they have questions or concerns. I'm going to keep my candidacy visible."

Sewer Commission candidate James Dow said he's not really concerned with a write-in campaign to challenge his own, "I think townspeople are smart enough to vote for the candidate they think will serve the town's need for the future, I don't see it as a popularity contest."

Both Sewer Commission candidates plan on being active on the campaign trail and available to answer voters' questions and hear their concerns.

The two-year seat on the Recreation Commission is the only open seat not to have a resident pull papers to run. A resident could mount a write-in, or sticker, campaign to fill the seat.

There are two candidates for the Planning Board, but each is running for a different seat. A five-year and a three-year position are open on the Planning Board. Charles Samuelson of 6 West Gate Lane is seeking the five-year position while Clark Brewer of 262 North Main Street is candidate for the three-year seat.

Other candidates not mentioned above include: Ronnie McMorris (Recreation Commission, 5 years); Mary Lou Lawrence, Sheila Evans, Rodney Hobson (Board of Library Trustees, 3 seats); Mary Granville (Board of Assessors, 3 years); Robin Lawrence (Board of Health, 3 years); Glenn Pratt (Water Commission, 3 years); Daniel Evans (Town Moderator, 3 years); and Marion Douglas (Town Clerk, 3 years).

Friday, March 7, 2008 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting to be held on Saturday, March 29, 2008 and for the Annual Town Election to be held on Saturday, April 5, 2008.

Department of Corrections

Due to a reporting error, an article in last week's Mariner, "No races yet" incorrectly stated incumbent candidate for the Board of Assessors Mary Granville had not returned her nomination papers to the Town Clerk. Granville returned her papers and had her signatures certified in mid-January. The Mariner regrets the error.

Still time to file for real estate tax exemptions

Exemption forms are available at the Assessors' office in Town Hall.

Cohasset Board of Assessors Office is currently accepting applications for fiscal 2008 real estate tax exemptions. The qualification date is July 1, 2007. Applicants who have filed tax exemption forms since July 1, 2007, are not required to file again. The deadline for filing is March 31, 2008.. The following exemptions are available:

Persons Over 70 Years of Age – $2,000 off. Clause 41C – if annual income is less that $18,000 (single person) or $23,000 (married couple), and the value of assets, excluding one's home, is less than $33,000 (single person) or $35,000 (married couple) and must own and occupy for previous 10 years.

Surviving Spouse (no age requirement) – $350 off. Clause 17D – also minors of deceased parents and persons over 70 years of age. There is no limit on income, but the value of your assets, excluding your home, must not exceed $40,000 and must own and occupy for previous five years.

Disabled Veterans – $800 off. Clause 22 – At least 10 percent disabled as determined by the Veterans Administration. Purple Heart Award recipients qualify, as well as Congressional Medal of Honor, Distinguished Service Cross, Air Force Cross, Navy Cross. Other exemptions are available for more seriously disabled veterans and paraplegic veterans. Veteran must have been a Massachusetts resident six months prior to enlisting or live in Massachusetts for five consecutive years.

Blind Persons – $875 off. Clause 37 – Must be registered with the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind.

Tax Deferral – All or part of the tax. Clause 41A – Applicant must be 65 years of age as of July 1, 2007, with income less than $40,000 and must have resided in Massachusetts for the preceding 10 years. All or part of the tax may be deferred. Effective 2007 the interest rate has been reduced to 4 percent.

Exemption forms are available at the Assessors' office in Town Hall. For more information, or to inquire if one has already filed, call the Assessors' office at 781-383-4114.

Central air conditioning for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat.
If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort® system doesn't require large metal ductwork, or major remodeling.
Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small, round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort® offers Lennox high efficiency air conditioning.
Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

Elmo, the snake, makes new friend at Osgood

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

VACATION WEEK

Hi Cohasset. I hope that everyone has had a wonderful week of vacation and fun. A few more days to enjoy and then back to school and work. If you have any stories or photos to share, make sure to send them in.

MEETING ELMO

Here is a funny little story about our well-loved adjustment counselor at the Joseph Osgood School here in Cohasset. Joshua Liberty is a second grader at Osgood, he attended preschool there also. Joshua has a pet snake named Elmo, who is now around 5 feet 7 inches long. Joshua has always loved holding Elmo, walking around with him around his neck. For four years, Joshua has been bringing Elmo in to class for show and tell, and every year Joshua asks Bob Lecount if he would like to hold him.

Well, Bob has always said "no thank you". Bob doesn't like snakes, and who can blame him. This is Joshua's last year at Osgood, and we just had to get Bob to hold Elmo, just once before the school year was out. Joshua's teacher Lauren Cook also held Elmo, but I don't think she was as frightened as Bob Lecount!

Bob, GREAT JOB and I am so impressed as I honestly felt that I had seen someone who was as equally not thrilled to be around those snakey things as me. YOU DID IT!

JOSEPH ON STAGE

Get ready to come and enjoy a colorful and musical story of Joseph and his coat of many colors as told through the musical score and lyrics of Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber presented by the Cohasset Dramatic Club. The dates for this show are Feb 29, March 1, 7,8,14 and 15 at 7:30 pm and March 2, 9 and 16 at 2 pm and the show is held at the Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium. Tickets are $14, $12 groups of 8 or more and may be purchased in advance at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, Front Street Books in Scituate or by calling 617-697-2115. Ticket also available at the door. This is such a great way to enjoy an evening with friends and/or family members with music, color and fun. See you there!

COLLEGE HONORS

We have some Cohasset students who have been recognized through their respective schools on some wonderful accomplishments for us to see.

Let us start with Melissa Anne Crawford, who is attending University of Delaware and was named to the dean's list for the 2007 fall semester. Melissa is a sophomore fashion merchandising major in the College of Human Services, Education and Public Policy.

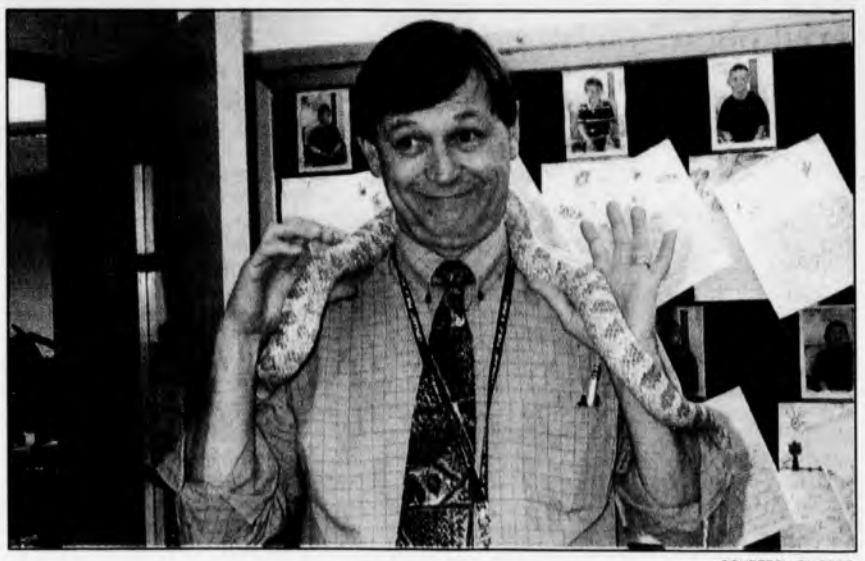
Kristen M. Dooley, a freshman in international business, and Kristen A. Watts, a senior in management, have been named to the fall semester dean's list at Bryant University in Smithfield, R.I. Both girls are students from Cohasset.

Northeastern University is pleased to let us know that Charlotte Reel, majoring in liberal arts, science and Rita Carpenter, majoring in nursing, both were named to the dean's list.

Jackie Flint, a sophomore at the College of the Holy Cross was named to the dean's list for the first semester of her school as well. Jackie is the daughter of Charlie and Judy Flint, who now reside in Hingham but were formally of Cohasset. Jackie grew up here in town and graduated from Milton Academy where she was a three-sport Varsity captain (field hockey, ice hockey and lacrosse.) Her freshman year she helped the Holy Cross Women's Ice Hockey team to one of its best seasons ever and currently the team sits third in the ECAC with an outstanding 12-4-1 record! Great job Jackie.

Congratulations to you all on this news. Keep up the good work.

The Barn at the Red Lion Inn will be transformed into a Venetian Carnivale setting for the South Shore Art Center's annual winter fundraising gala. The event will take place on Friday, Feb. 29th at 6:30 p.m. and will feature a seated dinner, live music and entertainment, and spectacular live and silent auctions. Boston's Billy Costa will be the master of ceremonies. Auction items include sports memorabilia, luxury travel packages, event tickets, and many works of art by highly regarded regional artists such as Sergio Roffo, Richard Loud, Anne Heywood, Irma Cerese, JoAnne Chittick, Cindy Vallino, Jane Flavell Collins, Frank Strazzulla, and Nancy Colella. For reservations to Venetian Carnivale contact the South Shore Art Center at 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org. Tickets are $125 for Art Center members, $145 for non-members. All proceeds support the exhibitions and education programs of the South Shore Art Center.



QUILT SHOW

Spring begins in Cohasset with the Quilt Show at Second Congregational Church. No matter what the weather outside, the interior brings an unbelievable array of color as more than 50 quilts are on display in the sanctuary. The color continues in the church hall as tables are set with white tablecloths and flower centerpieces, and red-aproned waiters await your selection from a delightful menu. This fifteenth annual Quilt Show and Luncheon will take place on March 1 from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.. Tickets are available at Second Congregational Church (781-383-0345) and are $12 for the entire event. It is a good idea to buy them ahead as seating is limited.

That is it for this week. Send in all your news and information along with any photos no later than Tuesdays by 5 pm.

Flying high above

Aerial photography brings new perspective to artist

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

From high above the ground, the earth below can be seen in a whole different perspective. From her very first small plane flight, Margot Cheel fell in love with the view from above and has made it her career to photograph the world below from hundreds of feet above. The intent with her aerial photography is to show the beauty, fragility and interconnectedness of the world around us.

Cheel, a Cohasset resident, has been an aerial photographer for 11 years. It was serendipity that she got into the unique line of work, like road markers on a highway, signs pointed her in the direction and slowly a new life's work came together.

It began as her youngest daughter headed off to college, Cheel was thinking about pursuing a new line of work, but she didn't have any firm plans or ideas.

As she headed home from dropping off her daughter at the University of Maine to her now empty nest her mind and eye began to take notice of small airports along the way. In the following week, she was drawn to a book in Buttonwood Books about women aviators, then a magazine article about a woman in a mid-life crisis who took up flying. Cheel recalls a quote from the woman, "the perspective from above really makes a difference in the way you walk the ground after."

She got the message — planes were somehow to be in her future. Before too long, she signed up for an introductory flight instruction. The introductory flight turned into lessons and her new passion in life was discovered.

"[My daughter] flew the nest so it was time for me to fly too," quips Cheel. At the same time she found flight, she was also taking art classes to nurture her creative side, particularly in photography, "slowly but surely the two interests came together."

She started out taking aerial shots of homes for a church fundraiser and her art form grew from there. She's helped realtors sell homes, given homeowners an interesting conversation piece and provided a unique tool for conservation groups to promote preservation.

"People connect with the photos, they mean something to people."
— Margot Cheel, aerial photographer

"People connect with the photos, they mean something to people" says Cheel, recalling a man at an art show who was drawn to her photo of Hingham Harbor and rotary. He excitedly told her, "this picture is my life." He went on to explain that he worked and lived all within the scope of the photo.

She has served The Trustees of the Reservations, The North & South Rivers Watershed Association, The Massachusetts Audubon Society, and collaborated with realtors throughout Boston's South Shore, chambers of commerce, seacoast facilities, as well as homeowners, local businesses and The Appalachia Service Project.

Now, she has a desire to expand her photography work to environmental groups, "aero-photography creates awareness of the environment, you see things from an entirely different perspective."

By flying above the air she has learned to appreciate the land and earth and where we live. While some think of aerial photography as a way of mapping, she strives to show the beauty and fragility of the earth through her photography.

"We're just running out of time, our earth is showing its vulnerability," said Cheel. She hopes to use her photography as a tool so people can see — in images — the fragility of our world.

"My photography is about enhancing people's awareness and connection to land," says Cheel. A photo of water off Chatham depict the golden sand meeting the blue water, but with an explanation is shows how powerful storms have changed the landscape of the area so land once connected is now separated by water. The landscape in this particular area changes every year, says Cheel.

In her flights, Cheel is on the lookout for the perfect shot whether she is on her way to a scheduled shot or not. She looks for the beauty inherent in nature, the artistic and aesthetic values that reveal themselves while flying. It may be colors that attract her eye or a pattern in the landscape.

Where the water meets the land is Cheel's favorite landscape to photograph. She has a photograph of the cerulean blue of the North River as it snakes through the tawny marshlands contrasting with a border of green woods. Others show the scalloped edge of Nantucket and the delicate balance of land, river and sea as the North River meets the Atlantic. More often than not Cheel doesn't set out to photograph the scene but she stumbles upon it, "if you go looking for it, you're not going to find it."

Staying flexible and being in the moment helps her to find the striking scenes that have put her work on the map, "you really don't know what you're going to find once your in the air."

But, part of the fun is coming upon that perfect unexpected shot, she says.

Aerial photography comes with its own set of challenges and limitations. Safety for flight is always a major consideration before she sets out for a shoot, says Cheel.

"Wind is one of the big factors, it can be a beautiful day on the ground but once 1000 feet in the air you can get tossed around," making for shaky photographs despite her camera's image stabilization, says Cheel. Rain puts a damper on flight and photography, while clouds can either add to a photo or make a good shot impossible. Coordination with appropriate air traffic control is necessary. Sometimes she'll be all ready for scheduled shoot but weather or other factors force her to wait until another day.

"All these challenges puts value on the aerial photos, it take coordination with weather and people," said Cheel, adding in the end it's still about who's behind the camera whether on the ground or in the air.

Although Cheel is a licensed pilot she does not fly and photograph at the same time, "both things require lots of concentration" so doing both is out of the question. She flies with a co-pilot, but often she'll fly the plane to destination or back to the airport to keep her skills sharp. She always shoots with the window open to ensure a clear view of the land below.

Cheel typically flies out of the Plymouth or Marshfield airports, but has flown out of the Cape airports. While visiting Florida, Ontario and Seattle, she has taken to flight to photograph.

Cheel also teaches a course called "The Artist's Way" based on a book and philosophy by Julia Cameron about the artistic process. The basis of the class is everyone is creative, it's just a matter of uncovering it, says Cheel.

"It's about keeping yourself fresh," says Cheel. Although she has been teaching it for 10 years, she's never gotten tired or bored of the course.

She's president of the New England chapter of the American Society of Media Photography as well as a member of the Ninety-Nines, the international organization of women pilots.

Cheel often displays her work at juried art shows, including Cohasset's Arts Festival. To view some of her work, visit her website at www.margotcheel.com. Cheel can be reached at 781-383-9184 or by e-mail at margot@margotcheel.com.

Seal stops at Sandy Beach

NE Aquarium sends harp seal on its way

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

During the summer residents flock to Sandy Beach to soak in the sun, build sandcastles and take a dip in the Atlantic Ocean. During the off-season, seals are often drawn to the golden sands of Sandy Beach to rest from their long journeys.

Such a seal came to Cohasset on a recent evening drawing the attention of neighbors, kids and nearby construction workers. The constant visitors left the seal unable to relax or rest and the New England Aquarium Marine Animal Response team intervened and helped the seal make her way back out to sea.

The adult harp seal, believed to be a female, arrived at Sandy Beach around 7p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 5. Although seals are a fairly routine sight along Cohasset shores — the arrival of one of the animals on the beach triggers calls to the police. The police notified representatives from the New England Aquarium about the seal. Cohasset resident Sheila Sinclaire, a marine biologist with the aquarium, was given the responsibility to monitor the animal.

"It's completely normal for animals to come out on the beach. It's not uncommon for seals to spend two or three days out of the water," said Sinclaire. Seals usually travel the ocean by themselves.

The seal, which was healthy, spent the night and following day lounging on Sandy Beach. As word spread about the seal, more people came down to the beach to check the brown and white harp seal up close. Little Harbor sewer project construction work on Jerusalem Road brought even more visitors.

When humans get to close to a seal, it increases the animal's stress because to seals humans are predators.

"The seal wasn't getting any rest," said Sinclaire, so on Thursday she and another aquarium representative made the decision to encourage the seal to return to the ocean. "We wanted to give her the opportunity to find somewhere else to rest.

Sinclaire and other aquarium marine rescue team members spent most of that Thursday persuading estimated 150-pound seal back to the ocean using two boards to guide the seal down to the water line. The tide had gone out making the distance from where the seal sat to the low water mark even greater.

Marine animal protection laws mandate observers stay 150 feet away from an animal, but Sinclaire said that's often impossible.

"Observe from a safe distance so you don't stress out the animal," said Sinclaire, giving 75 feet as a guideline.

Seals are commonly spotted along the New England shoreline. Unlike whales or dolphins, seals are semi-aquatic and are comfortable out of water, according to a New England Aquarium pamplet, "Most seals come onto beaches to sleep, nurse or soak up some sun."

An adult harp seal, believed to be a female, tries to relax on Sandy Beach.

The seal, which was healthy, spent a night and following day lounging on Sandy Beach.

The Aquarium says seals are cute but they are wild animals and should not be disturbed. If people get too close, the seal might bite or become upset.

The Aquarium recommends the following if someone spots a seal on the beach:

- Watch quietly from at least 150 feet away
- Keep dogs away from the seal
- Do not offer the seal food or water
- Do not pour water on the seal or try to cover it with a towel or blanket.
- Do not try to make the seal move.

While most seals on the beach are perfectly healthy, sometimes they do need assistance.

"If the sea has obvious injuries, gunky eyes, or looks skinny or underweight, the Aquarium asks that observers note its location, size, coloring and behavior and call the Aquarium's 24-7 Animal Hotline at 617-973-5247.

It is illegal to disturb seals or other marine animals. Those caught harassing or disturbing seals could face large fines.

The seal makes its way from the beach into the water with a little encouragement from the marine animal response team.

The 150-pound adult harp seal swims away. Unlike whales or dolphins, seals are semi-aquatic and are comfortable out of water.

Driven to distraction

There are some studies that show talking in a car whether on a cell phone, using a hands-free device, or with another passenger can be equally distracting and cause accidents.

There is also plenty of evidence that turning a radio dial, reaching for a cup of coffee, or turning around to check on your kids in the back seat – can cause the driver to veer off the road or into the oncoming lane.

However, even with that knowledge, the use of hand-held cell phones by motorists has reached such epidemic proportions that, as state Rep. Garrett Bradley points out, the practice is in a class by itself.

Any pedestrian or motorist can share stories about preoccupied drivers on their cell phones.

From our vantage point from the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square, we see so many drivers get into their motor vehicle and once they start to pull out of their parking space on South Street they pick up the cell phone and make a call. Why can't they make the call while they are still parked?

We would also estimate that at least 50 percent of the drivers of cars passing through the four-way stop at Central and South streets are chatting away on hand-held cell phones.

Driving along Route 3A or Route 228, we have become more defensive in our driving. We have found more vehicles veering toward us – thankfully, the oncoming, distracted driver recovers his or her focus and pulls back into the proper lane.

There is a bill on Beacon Hill that would ban cell phone use for all junior drivers (16-1/2 to 18) and ban hand-held cell phones for adult drivers.

While all of us may not agree on whether using a cell phone should be a "surchargeable" violation (adding points to our insurance) – we should be in agreement that the issue needs to be debated and something needs to be done.

What is really distressing is that while the House of Representatives has debated and passed a bill banning hand-held cell phone use by motorists – the bill is languishing in the Senate and may not even come up for debate this session. Apparently the Senate "leadership" sets the calendar and can arbitrarily decide which bills reach the floor.

We urge our readers to contact state Sen. Robert Hedlund, who objects to making cell phones a surchargeable offense but wants to debate the issue, and let him know your thoughts on this critical issue.

At the very least, we need a tough law restricting the use of cell phones, whether hand-held or hands-free, by junior operators.

Many of us remember before cell phones were the norm, teens had to call home from a friend's house or even a pay phone to let their parents know they were running late. There were many parents "back then" who would have appreciated the cell phone because it would have also provided a way for them to call their child.

But as cell phones among young people have proliferated and the ability to text, talk and take pictures has become increasingly popular – mixing the devices with an inexperienced driver is a recipe for disaster. Those of us with adult children, who missed the cell phone boom as teens, are now grateful of that fact.

We hope that our elected officials will take immediate action to protect the public by restricting cell phone use by junior drivers and debate a wider ban to come up with a law that is fair and enforceable.

OPERATING WHILE TEXTING

Text messaging, dialing and talking on cell phones while driving has become an increasingly disturbing trend. The question is whether Massachusetts will join other states in legislating some restrictions for drivers who use the devices while operating a motor vehicle.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Support for commuter boat

TO THE EDITOR:

I've had the opportunity to ride the Hingham Commuter Boat to downtown Boston for the past six years after my wife and I relocated from Boston to the South Shore. It's been an effective, efficient and enjoyable way to commute into the city. I've always been impressed with the extensive schedule and flexibility the boat offers commuters. My wife has also used the boat to come into the city to meet me or friends for dinner or to go shopping. It's made both of us more connected to the city. I also notice that when others are looking to move to the South Shore, the commuter boat is often mentioned as one of the perks.

When the commuter train started running back in the fall I watched in anticipation to see what would happen to the number of riders on the boat. I admit, I rode the train a few times to see which would be better for me. I quickly found that there was no difference in the time spent commuting, and was reminded about what I really enjoyed about the boat – the networking opportunities, the customer service provided by the staff, plus, a pretty terrific view.

Recently, I've noticed quite a reduction in the number of cars in the boat parking lot and the number of people on the boat. I've always been appreciative of the flexible schedule the boat offers, and I'm growing concerned that the boat will have to respond to a reduced number of riders, and therefore, start to reduce the boat schedule. As a regular commuter I think we should recognize that in order for all of us to benefit from having this unique way to get into Boston, we need to continue to ride the boat. We should take a look around, see what's happening with the boat and encourage people to ride.

HEALTH NOTES

Stormwater issue can be draining

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Tip O'Neill said all politics is local; well so is stormwater and the problems it creates.

There seem to be two factions appearing in the aftermath of several recent storm events. For every flooding problem, there are at least two proposed solutions. Generally the solutions are either related to treating stormwater by developing devices to recharge it into the land, so-called smart growth solutions, or creation of additional drainage systems to get the runoff out into the nearest estuary. Supporters of each approach to remediation differ depending on location with respect to one's house. Tip O'Neill said all politics is local; well so is stormwater and the problems it creates. Several years ago, the problem was in Newtonville. When new water pipes were put in that neighborhood, drainage was installed and the flooding problems were lessened substantially — and flooding appeared in other back yards near where the water was being diverted to the Harbor.

One of the things Gary Vanderweil proposed and the Selectmen passed was the creation of a yet another master plan; this time for stormwater. If such a plan is to succeed, the Town will need to adopt a unified effort involving the use of every available means to recharge water into the ground where the soils permit and drainage of areas without overflowing the drainage structures. Both will require storing sufficient water in the system so that overflow is minimized or eliminated. Not an easy job. One further addition to the task will be to fix all of the broken and damaged connections to the sewer from homes using old technology clay pipes. It is estimated that 30 percent of the pollution coming after the first flush of surface water into our drainage system is caused by broken sewer pipes.

We have already seen the disruption caused by the type of construction ongoing to fix the problem. It's going to be the task of the stormwater master plan to integrate sewer, water line, drainage and stormwater remediation into one concerted effort. The thing we all can do if we are not yet affected by the disruption being caused is to offer support to those presently being affected. Soon, backhoes and bulldozers will be coming to your neighborhood.

And the fixing will not come cheap.

An example of the two solutions to a problem is Treats Pond. Last week, you read in the Mariner part of the story about Treats Pond. In reality, the problem of flooding around Treats Pond has three solutions: two proposed by the Army Corps of Engineers described in the Mariner last week. The third solution involves periodic removal of sand blocking a drain from Treats Pond on the beach at Sandy Cove. Since the beginning of this year, the DPW has been denied access to private property for the purpose of cleaning out the drain on Sandy Cove Beach. As a result several houses have been immersed in water a good part of the time since. Such flooding represents a real health problem.

At its last meeting, the Board of Health relinquished most of its stormwater responsibilities to the Stormwater Committee appointed by the Selectmen. We no longer report to the EPA as previously required, and we have endorsed and approved a new Stormwater Bylaw subject to any minor revisions the Selectmen may have.

On the Warrant for Town Meeting, there is an article authorizing a sum of money for "Treats Pond restoration". This is an article not to be taken lightly. Nor is the article creating a Stormwater Bylaw.

The Treats Pond article is for a sum of money to restore Treats Pond. Several solutions exist, but the issue deals with the health of dwellings all along a large section of Atlantic Avenue where flooding has become intolerable because of substantial construction of large dwellings in the area on both sides of Atlantic Avenue; dwellings where, for the most part, the effects of stormwater draining from their property was ignored.

The proposed Stormwater Master Plan utilizing the Army's ideas for Treats Pond or any other solution should be a matter for consideration by the Stormwater Committee for recommendations on the technology, but also the Selectmen and finally, citizens of the Town who have to pay for it.

Some details about Dig Safe

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush Project – We continue to review Cohasset's Open Items list with the MBTA. This is a list of 42 items from the Greenbush project that need the MBTA/Cashman Balfour Beatty teams to address. Thirty-two of these remain uncompleted, at this time. The Town does not have a total mutual agreement with the project concerning the complete list of open items. However, we continue to present the Town's case.

The extreme rainstorm on Wednesday, Feb. 13 caused flooding all over town. At Spring Street near the tracks, an under-construction storm drain caused a washout to occur. We took a photo of the washout and emailed it to the Greenbush Project.

Within one day they came out and erected a temporary barrier to keep people out of the dangerous area. Thanks to the Greenbush Project for your quick response.

Little Harbor Project – We would like to thank those of you who have commented to us concerning our additional coverage of the Little Harbor Project. We are glad that some of you find our background articles interesting and informative.

During the project, we have had a number of unscheduled outages of other utilities that share space in the roadways with our new sewer lines. In order to understand why this might happen, let's first look at what the project does to try to avoid interrupting other utility services.

By state law, all contractors are required to contact Dig Safe (Dig Safe System, Inc. is the official corporate name of the organization and their web site is www.digsafe.com.) The Dig Safe service is free to all contractors and is funded by its member utilities. All contractors must, by law, call Dig Safe 72 hours prior to beginning underground construction on public lands. (Dig Safe does not do work on private property, but it does mark buried utilities on public and private ways.) It is Dig Safe's responsibility to travel to the construction site and mark the underground services for its member utilities. A color coding scheme is used to identify the various underground utilities. These are the funny colored lines and marks you see in the streets or on the ground prior to construction.

So if you see a red line, it means that there is a buried electrical cable under that line. Similarly, blue is used for water services, and so on. However, not all utilities are members of Dig Safe. The member utilities can be found on Dig Safe's web site. For example, Cohasset Water is not a member, because municipal water systems are not covered by the state regulation. Consequently, Dig Safe will inform anyone doing construction in Cohasset that they must contact the Cohasset Water Department separately to mark the underground water services within the construction area. The next obvious question is why doesn't Cohasset Water belong to Dig Safe? First of all it is an added expense to our Water Department. And, since their crews are all local it is easy for them to get to any construction location in Cohasset to mark their own lines.

So far, this all sounds neat and clear. So why do we still find unplanned underground utilities?

Let's look at a recent situation on Jerusalem Road. Dig Safe marked out electrical wires with the requisite red line. So, construction started what did we find? About two feet below the road surface on Jerusalem Road we found a buried 2 in. by 12 in. wooden plank. In the vicinity of the plank we found a buried 3 conductor 5,000 volt main power distribution cable, a 230 volt secondary power set of cables, and lastly, cable to support the street lighting circuits. Dig safe only indicated, what one might assume was a buried wire. Instead, there were three sets of wires, a very complicated electrical structure. The high voltage line was inadvertently nicked by a power shovel removing the line from service. Fortunately, the homes in this area were able to be back-fed from another power source, so the inconvenience to the residents was minimal.

Another situation has occurred with water lines. A number of the older water lines are constructed with a non-metallic piping. Thus, it is much more difficult to locate these lines. Sometimes they cannot be found at all. (Note today when non-metallic lines are used, metallic tracers are buried with the pipe so it can be located underground at a later time.) And, to make matters worse, a large number of older water lines have never been documented on any plans. So, occasionally unmarked and undocumented water lines are accidentally broken by the Little Harbor contractor. Fortunately, the Water Department is usually "Johnny on the spot" and quickly repairs the broken line. But, residents are briefly inconvenienced.

In a prior article we spoke of an old Western Union line that was found in Jerusalem Road. When do you think the last time a Cohasset home used these lines? Our guess – probably not since the 1920s. We don't mean to paint an impossibly complicated picture, but sometimes very positive things do come out in the end. We pointed out previously that the other utilities had no plans to upgrade their facilities in the Little Harbor construction area. Well, that may be about to change. Very recently, we've had detailed discussions with National Grid, our electric utility. They have agreed to work in our trenches to bury conduits that will be used later to provide new wiring to selected areas of Jerusalem Road. We are currently discussing a similar proposal with Verizon, and we expect to hear from them shortly. In the final analysis, we may not only have upgraded water, new sewer, and better drainage, but also some new electric and phone services in some of the same areas.

Holidays, holidays

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Friday is George Washington's birthday, only we celebrated it Monday but we called it Presidents Day because we wanted to include Abraham Lincoln whose birthday was six days before that and only government workers really paid much attention to a lot of it.

Got that?

Here it is only the third week in February and already we've had four holidays and I'm counting Valentines Day because I called Strawberry Fair, the Norwell restaurant, to see if we could use coupons for our gracious dining that day and was told we couldn't because it was a holiday.

I am coming to the conclusion that the reason most of our industry is being outsourced to China, Indonesia and other foreign lands is that we have just too many holidays to fill the orders and I say this as one who once protested the 37-1/2 hour work week as a speed up.

Here it is only the third week in February and already we've had four holidays and I'm counting Valentines Day...

We start the year off with a holiday (Jan. 1) and, before you know it, there's another, Martin Luther King Day, on the third Monday and another, Valentine's Day, Feb. 14 and yet another, Presidents Day, the third Monday in February.

Notice I am not including Groundhog Day (Feb. 2) or Mardi Gras (the Tuesday before Lent) or the Lunar New Year, which this year was celebrated for 15 days starting Feb. 7 by the one in five residents of Quincy who are Asian by extraction, or Ronald Reagan's birthday (Feb. 6), the target of the Gipper's fan club.

There's only one holiday in March and that's Evacuation Day, the day in 1776 when the British left Boston, official only in Boston, Revere, Chelsea and Winthrop, but known as St. Patrick's Day everywhere, perhaps a double or triple holiday since recovery from corned beef and cabbage and whatever else often requires an extra day or two of rehab.

April starts with a holiday, April Fools Day, really hits its stride with Patriots Day (the third Monday) when everything 26 miles, 385 yards east of Hopkinton gets tied up for the Boston Marathon, and tails off with Arbor Day (the last Friday), when we all get out and hug a tree.

May brings us not only Mothers Day (the second Sunday) and Memorial Day (the last Monday), which used to be known as Decoration Day, but also Armed Forces Day (the third Saturday) and National Teachers Day (the Tuesday of the first full week), when the kids leave their weapons at home.

That brings us to June, which has another one of those holidays, Bunker Hill Day (June 17), which is observed in Suffolk County only, as well as Flag Day (June 17) and Fathers Day (the third Sunday), the biggest day of the year for the necktie industry.

By this time it's summer and the vacation season when we can all rest up from the holidays.

Introducing Cohasset to the world

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

Until this week I've written my column with only a local audience in mind. But the Mariner is available for free on the Internet these days, which means in theory anyone in the world, can read it as soon as it's published. An Australian kangaroo farmer could be perusing the paper on-line as we speak, reading with concern about the latest Buick to beach itself on the railroad tracks. For all we know our storm water bylaw is a huge hit in China. They've got 1.3 billion people over there, so even if only a hundred million of them follow the Little Harbor Sewer Expansion Project, that's a lot of people to you and me.

I believe it's time we stopped thinking of the Mariner as just a "local" phenomenon, and used the web's international reach to introduce ourselves to a curious, tech-savvy, purely hypothetical global audience.

Hello, Others!

Cohasset Massachusetts is a picturesque seaside village on Boston's South Shore. Translated roughly from Algonquin, the name Cohasset means "long rocky place." The Wampanoags called the area, "long, God dam rocky place," while the Nausets called it, "the place where we dump all our rocks." It definitely has that "small town" feel. Imagine a spy satellite that can look straight down your pants and tell the CIA whether you're going commando. That satellite would miss Cohasset, and the fact that we all go commando remains the town's best kept secret.

A cozy community like Cohasset has many advantages. For instance you don't have to "ring up" your friends and neighbors in order to see them every day. Just go to the library. Or the school. Or the grocery store, or the Girl Scout drop off, or the dump. Or all five in succession. Wherever you go, they'll be there for you, ready to talk about anyone who's somewhere else at the time.

Leaving valuables behind while we run errands may seem careless until you realize just how many valuables we have to keep track of here. Our key chains alone weigh close to five pounds.

Its charming look and ideal location might evoke images of homogeneity and privilege, but Cohasset is a town that celebrates racial diversity. As it happens we don't have any ourselves, but we're quite happy for towns that do. Besides, what we lack in color we make up for in other kinds of variety. For instance every mansion is just a little different. As are the professional interests of Cohasset's working residents, which range everywhere from finance to investments to financial investments. And if you're looking for physical diversity, all it takes is a June afternoon stroll on Sandy Beach to see that not everyone in town takes spinning classes over the winter. You Cohasset readers know who I'm talking about I'm sure!

Cohasset has a very low crime rate, a luxury that affords its residents extra time to worry incessantly about what little crime there is. A purse is snatched from the passenger seat of an open BMW convertible parked at the post office with its engine running, and serious consideration is given to hiring more police officers. In the end, since extra police tend to cost money, it's decided that half the force normally assigned to directing traffic around landscaping trucks will be pulled off to comb the woods for empty Coach bags, and another town meeting is adjourned.

Leaving valuables behind while we run errands may seem careless until you realize just how many valuables we have to keep track of here. Our key chains alone weigh close to five pounds. We've got three or four car keys, keys for our house, keys for our previous house that we've been trying to sell since 2006 — it's a pain to carry them all around. So we leave them in the car. Cohasset is like one big Hertz Gold Club parking lot. It's the AAA recommended pit stop for fugitives involved in high-speed police chases. Reaching the Music Circus is like crossing the Mason-Dixon line. We would take our keys with us into the house at night but then our whole tourism industry would go in the tank.

I hope the information I've shared has made the stories you read in the Cohasset Mariner easier to understand for those of you in other parts of the world, like Marshfield or Greece. Naturally we in Cohasset have many questions about your culture as well. Do you love your children too? What exactly is a Babka? Is there anything in your Holy books that can explain how David Tyree hung onto that pass? And what is your traditional reaction when you see a set of train tracks veering off the road toward a golf course? We'd love to hear from you!

John Lengyel lives in Cohasset. He apologizes for blowing the lid off the whole commando thing.

Artificial turf field

On Cohasset's TV talk show, Our Town, co-hosts Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin sit down with George McGoldrick and Bill Cavanaro of the newly formed Cohasset Sports Partnership to discuss their efforts to raise funds to build an artificial turf field in Cohasset.

Tune in Mondays at 9p.m. on channel 10 or catch up on Tuesdays or Thursday at 9p.m.

Tune in Cohasset and stay informed.

Joint budget meeting to be held

A joint budget meeting with members of the Board of Selectmen, School Committee and the Advisory Committee has been scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 28, 7p.m. at the high school library. The three boards will convene to discuss the fiscal 2009 budget.

Jury out on cell phone ban

would ban junior operators (those under 18) from using cell phones while driving and require adults to use only hands-free communication devices. Forty-seven representatives did not back the legislation.

The legislation would mean that junior operators could not use a cell phone or hands-free cell phone and adults could use cell phones if equipped with hands-free gadgets, like earpieces or headsets. All drivers would also be banned from "texting." Adult drivers would be allowed to use their hands to initiate (dial) or terminate (hang up) from a call. The legislation recognizes that all drivers need two hands to operate a motor vehicle.

Bradley explained that the House allowed "ramp-up time" should the bill pass deferring the implementation of surcharges for a year.

Hedlund has no problem with restricting cell phone use for junior operators. As a member of the Conference Committee in 2006 charged with finalizing a bill on junior operator restrictions, he backed a ban on cell phones but was outvoted on that measure.

"The reason why I supported that was that I have seen the data on the prevalence of accidents among teen drivers and that they are the most susceptible to distractions," Hedlund said.

Hedlund also said he is concerned that police might give motorists a break and not apply the law even-handedly because the offense would translate into an insurance surcharge.

Cohasset Police Lt. William Quigley said the underlying problem is driver inattention, whether it is talking on a cellular telephone, texting friends, or juggling a cup of coffee while driving.

"It seems that vehicles have become an extension of the office," Quigley said. "Until we realize that operating a motor vehicle requires our undivided attention, we will continue to see accidents increase on congested roads like Route 3A."

Quigley said personally, he thinks that education, followed-up with enforcement (of any new law), will help reduce accidents.

"We would fully support any law that enhances safety and reduces accidents," he said. "All you have to do is take a ride through the yard of one of the local body shops and you'll notice that most of the wrecked cars being repaired have heavy front end damage. That tells me that people are following too close and not paying attention to what's going on in front of them."

Art Kinsman, AAA of Southern New England director of government affairs, said text messaging while driving is clearly dangerous. A person texting is typing on a tiny keyboard, taking his hands and eyes off the road for extended and repeated periods of time.

Kinsman said talking on a cell phone is also a distraction, albeit a lesser one, but the reason is surprising and tends to debunk the idea that requiring hands-free devices will solve the safety problem.

"We've found it's the conversation itself that's the real distraction," he said.

How's that different from talking to a passenger?

It may not be that different, Kinsman said. There are all sorts of distractions drivers need to be on the alert for, many of them decidedly low-tech, such as eating or turning around to yell at the kids in the back seat, he said.

Kinsman said voice-recognition technology would obviously make dialing safer, but he said there may be an unintended consequence. As cell phone use becomes easier, it may become even more pervasive.

His advice: "We tell people, keep it short, and if it's going to be a lengthy conversation, find some place safe to pull over."

Jessica Foley, an attorney specializing in juvenile and criminal defense with the firm Sullivan and Sweeney with an office in Hingham, said hands free devices are a good idea, as it is an attempt to prevent accidents by distracted drivers.

"However, I would imagine that unless drivers have updated technology and/or are tech savvy they are going to look down to dial their telephone, and this is when they will be most distracted.

"It is an attempt to prevent accidents by distracted drivers," Foley said. "But I'm not sure that the supporters of the cell phone ban have thought through the law's impact. It will increase license suspensions for junior operators (drivers between 16-1/2 and 18), but perhaps it will keep them safer.

"This law will increase ticket revenues for our cities and towns, increase insurance surcharges and also give law enforcement yet another reason to conduct traffic stops," she said.At least five states have banned hand-held devices, including California, whose law goes into effect July 1.

Reporters Rebecca Hyman and Paula Vogler contributed to this story.

Some statistics

- 73 percent of 1200 drivers surveyed talk on cell phones while driving. Use was highest among young drivers.
- 19 percent say they text message while driving
- Some research has found that talking on a cell phone is as dangerous as driving drunk, even if the phone is a hands-free model
- 80 percent of crashes and 65 percent of near crashes involve some form of driver inattention within three seconds of the event.
- 15 states have passed laws banning or restricting young drivers from using cell phones.
- As many as 40 countries restrict or prohibit the use of cell phones while driving.
- Businesses are increasingly prohibiting workers from using cell phones while driving to conduct business. There have been several cases where an employer has been held liable for an accident by a driver using a cell phone.

A summary of House Bill 4477

House Bill 4477, an act prohibiting the use of certain communication devices while operating a motor vehicle.

Section 1. Defines the terms "mobile telephone", "hands-free accessory", "hands-free mobile telephone", and "mobile electronic device" within chapter 90 of the General Laws. This section also allows an exception for drivers using hands-free technology to activate or deactivate a phone call using one hands..

Section 2. Prohibits junior operators from using mobile telephones, whether hand-held or hands-free, and mobile electronic devices, such as text messaging devices, while operating a motor vehicle.

Punishes violations accordingly:

- 1st offense: $100 fine and 60-day JOL or learner's permit suspension
- 2nd offense: $250 fine and 180-day JOL or learner's permit suspension
- Subsequent offenses: $500 fine and 1-year JOL or learner's permit suspension

Exempts mobile telephone calls made for emergency purposes, including emergency calls to a law enforcement agency, health care provider, fire department or other emergency service or entity, provided that the junior operator provides documentary or other evidence in support of such claim.

Exempts junior operators using a mobile telephone or mobile electronic device while pulled over to the side of a public way and out of a lane of travel from punishment under this section

Section 3. Strikes a provision in chapter 90, section 13 allowing the use of mobile telephones while driving, as long as the vehicle operator keeps one hand on the steering wheel at all times.

Inserts a provision in the same section allowing the use of amateur radios while driving, as long as the vehicle operator keeps one hand on the steering wheel at all times.

Section 4. Strikes a provision in chapter 90, section 13 prohibiting television screens or other equipment capable of receiving a television broadcast that is viewable from the driver's seat of a motor vehicle.

For consistency, television-related equipment forward of the driver's seat will now be treated the same as DVD players within the definition of a mobile electronic device and will be banned under chapter 90, section 8 for junior operators or chapter 90, section 24Y for adult drivers.

Section 5. Creates a new section 24Y in chapter 90, which prohibits adult drivers from using mobile electronic devices or hand-held mobile telephones while driving, but allows for the use of hands-free mobile telephones.

Punishes violations accordingly:

- 1st offense: $100 fine
- 2nd offense: $250 fine
- Subsequent offenses: $500 fine

Exempts mobile telephone calls made for emergency purposes, including emergency calls to a law enforcement agency, health care provider, fire department or other emergency service or entity, provided that the violator provides documentary or other evidence in support of such claim.

Exempts persons using a mobile telephone or mobile electronic device while pulled over to the side of a public way and out of a lane of travel from punishment under this section.

Exempts emergency personnel, such as firefighters operating a fire-fighting vehicle, the driver of a rescue vehicle or ambulance, and state, county or local public safety officials, from the provisions of this section.

Section 6. Postpones an offense under this act from being surchargeable until July 1, 2009.

Section 7. Directs the RMV, in cooperation with the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau, to implement a public awareness campaign for junior operators and adult drivers on the restrictions of this bill.

Weighing in on driving with cell phones

Readers were asked: Do you have any horror stories involving a close call with a driver on a cell phone? Is it time Massachusetts restricted cell phone use on the roads?

'Close calls'

I ride my bike frequently around the South Shore and am amazed by the number of close calls that I have with drivers talking on the phone and ignoring me on the side of the road riding my bike. Probably the worst place around is the Greenbush Rotary. It's difficult enough to navigate the rotary, but balancing the phone on one shoulder and driver is way too much for most people.

Marty Grassie

'Serious menace'

I witnessed a slow speed head-on collision clearly caused by one driver being on her cell phone when she needed both hands when rounding a corner. Hand held or not, they are a serious menace to public safety-yours and mine.

R. Murray Campbell

'Pass the law'

I have no more horror stories than the average professional commuter, as I see people (and I am one of them) talking on the cell phone every day while driving. I would fully support a ban on 18-and-under use of phones while driving, and a requirement for hands-free operation by adults. Massachusetts should pass the law, in my opinion.

Chris Blackburn

'Close calls'

I have had quite a few close calls actually. The two that stand out for me are as follows.

The first: I was sitting in my first-floor home office at my computer and a truck drove off the road into a small ravine — about 40 feet from where I was sitting at my computer. Fortunately, the young driver was O.K. despite hitting a tree and crushing the whole right side of the truck's cab. A police officer at the scene said it was lucky there was no passenger with him, then added to me, "And lucky for you, your car, or your house that there was a tree."

It turns out the young man was looking down to dial his cell phone and he wandered too far to the right, started off the road into the drop-off and couldn't recover.

The second incident was a woman on a cell phone who went at a very high rate of speed through a red light on Route 3A at the Beechwood Street intersection. My husband, who was driving, is fortunately a very cautious driver and was able to stop as we entered the intersection — but it was very close. The woman didn't even seem to be aware of what she was doing as she sped on her way.

I honestly think the world has become too fast-paced and people are not "present" to what they are doing at the moment. While people may not intend to endanger others while they talk, text and dial cell phones while driving, the reality is it only takes a moment to change someone's life forever — whoever that might be.

As you might have guessed, I do think cell phone use on the roads should be restricted as this bill states.

Jane Norton

'Brain'

I have heard that the same part of the brain that focuses on traffic outside a moving vehicle is the one we use to have a conversation on a phone — not the same as if talking with another passenger. Very interesting!

Dee Lehner

'Artful drafting'

No horror stories, and a qualified YES to "Is It Time?"

As with any legislation (and I have not seen the bill you refer to) artful drafting will make a huge difference in whether it is effective. Exactly what gadget/use/circumstance behind the wheel does it apply to? Is enforcement realistic? Does it make sense or provoke resistance?

I agree that a law regarding use of devices while driving is probably needed, due to their proliferation. I think it will only work if it is well thought-out.

I think hands-free use overall is less a distraction and therefore to be preferred; but if you're in stopped traffic and want to call ahead, what's the difference? Want to report an emergency but can't pull over? Why have to choose?

Junior drivers may benefit from a total ban on using just to underscore the privilege, once gained, and its value; and to eliminate texting (and whatever else . . .), which is obviously completely incompatible with driving. It might steer them to form the right habits early.

Agnes McCann

'Ban supported'

According to WebMD: "Drivers who talk on a mobile phone are four times more likely to be involved in a serious crash". As well, 5 states (California, Connecticut, New Jersey, New York and Washington), the District of Columbia and the Virgin Islands have enacted jurisdiction-wide cell phone laws prohibiting driving while talking on handheld cell phones. Many other states ban cell phone use in specific situations. At least 45 nations ban cell phones use while driving – including the UK since 2003, Japan since 1999 and Russia since 2001. Finally, on a more local level, while walking down Sohier Street several months ago I observed a cell chatting driver hook a wide swerving left hand turn onto Sohier — about 50 feet in front of me. After brushing up onto the sidewalk, the cell chatting driver quickly hurtled the large and oncoming SUV back onto the street. If I had taken my morning walk 10 seconds earlier I'm sure I would not be writing this note. Yes, Massachusetts clearly should ban cell phones while driving and if the State does not do it then the town of Cohasset should.

Kevin R. McCarthy

'Over due'

I've had a lot of close calls, about one per week, but no accidents yet! I've learned to be extra vigilant with shoppers leaving malls after shopping, parents leaving schools after dropping off kids, movie-goers leaving theaters, etc. These are the "I'm leaving—be there shortly" calls! The ban is overdue!

Dick Brooks

'Distracted'

Several years ago, I was driving south on Main Street opposite French Memories when a man pulled out of his parking spot beside the filling station and drove into the side of my van breaking a rear door window. He said his cell phone had distracted him.

Steve Bobo

'Headset'

I have no personal experiences, but support a junior operators ban, as well as the headset idea for "mature drivers".

Susi Coley

'Near fatality'

I did witness a near fatality as one junior driving approximately 19-22 was driving from Hull to 3A a few Sundays back, 6:30a.m. She was on her cell taking the curve in the road where she simply slid across yellow line into on coming traffic lane, and just barely missed an oncoming car, due to the other driver's quick reflexes (A Senior!).

The girl never got off her phone, nor did she get out to see how the other driver was doing, she just continued on like it was no big deal! I witnessed the whole event, and at the next red light, I asked her how she was, she was still on the phone, and just nodded, "ok."

I'm all for hands free in Massachusetts — it will cause the driver to focus on the road vs. on the phone, and perhaps there will be less accidents!

Mary Cirafice

'Impossible

I don't believe that this law, if passed, will be very effective, so therefore I do not support it. It is simply impossible to get people to not use their cell phones on a daily basis, especially while they're driving. Though talking while driving does pose an obvious danger, legislation against it may cause people to try to hide such activities and create an even greater danger. Also, I don't believe that restricting people to hands free devices will lessen the problem. Psychological studies have shown that it is not the actual phone this poses the danger, but the concentration (or lack thereof) of the driver that is focusing on a conversation with someone else. In a nutshell, drivers become virtually blind when they try to talk while they drive.

Mike Froio

'Safety's sake'

There are examples I could cite EVERYDAY that involve a driver not paying attention because he/she is on a cell phone. Going through red lights, involuntarily reducing their speed to a crawl, swaying into an adjacent lane (or even across double solid lines into oncoming traffic), and nearly running down pedestrians are daily observations. Then when you warn these drivers about their safety miscues by the only safe means available to another driver (the horn), you receive glares, foul language, aggressive driving, and even stopping so they can share their opinion up front and personal. But the reaction, which is even more disturbing, is when the driver does not notice you beeping the horn. Their cell phone conversation, and poor driving, is unabated! Because I work in Boston, I also see how pedestrians on cell phones become zombies who further exacerbate safety concerns. As a former police officer, these are times I wish I was back in uniform and had the authority to issue summons. To paraphrase a safety message regarding motorcycles: "Cell Phones are Everywhere!" For safety's sake, let's hope these two omnipresent enthusiasts never cross paths.

Sex offenders and community safety

MENTAL HEALTH

JOSEPH DOHERTY

Like the bumper sticker that says, "Motorcycles are everywhere," so are sex offenders. They inhabit our families, they roam our parks and our playgrounds and they walk our streets. Much as we might wish it otherwise, they will not go away. While it is easy to make them a target of our anger, it is much harder to understand who they are.

These days not many people want to understand sex offenders. With increasing regularity, community after community, not just in Massachusetts, but nationwide, is enacting ordinances to limit where sex offenders can reside. Some communities do not want them living within their jurisdictions at all. When news reports surface of yet another sex crime it just increases our anxiety that something must be done to stem this seeming epidemic. Restricting where offenders can live appears to be a good solution. At least it calms our anxiety in that we can point to something being done.

One question that might be asked is "Does stigmatizing and already stigmatized population – by enacting ordinances that restrict where they can live – really promote community safety?" While such restrictions might assuage our fears about sex offenders, are they really helpful in keeping our communities safe?

One might begin by asking oneself what the needs of an offender are upon his being released from prison. When offenders are asked this question the same three responses are generally given – work, housing and a support network. All three are essential in stabilizing the offender. Without stability an offender is at risk to act out again, which is one argument against restricting where they live, as uncertainty about how safe their housing situation is makes them unstable.

Unless the offender has a specialized skill, and his employer either does not do background checks or does them and is willing to give the offender a chance, employment is hard to come by.

If an offender does not have employment, or the employment that he has is not sufficient for him to rent his own apartment, offenders are faced with one of two choices – live in a shelter or live on the street. Neither promotes stability.

Some offenders have described themselves as modern day lepers. Few are befriended and the mental template that most people have sees all who carry the label of sex offender as "dangerous" people who would recidivate at the earliest opportunity. While this is certainly true of some sex offenders, it should not be generalized to all sex offenders. But it often is and the offender ends up being isolated at a time in their life when someone who has some faith in them counts the most.

Who will undertake the task of aiding sex offenders just released from prison?

Adjustment to the outside world is difficult enough for someone who has been incarcerated, but the adjustment process is more difficult for the sex offender, due to the nature of his crime. The Department of Correction offers no worthwhile transition program and while it allegedly has assumed the responsibility for providing the offender with job and housing leads, the information is often outdated and of no use.

Legislators cannot be counted upon to offer a solution as they appear to be busy catering to the fears of their constituents, i.e. passing restrictive laws that do not ensure safety and only promote instability into the life of an offender, making him more at risk to act out. (Last month the Georgia Supreme Court unanimously ruled that limiting where offenders can live was unconstitutional. Many other states may follow.)

We all want safety in our communities, especially if we have sex offenders living within our borders. But let's not delude ourselves into thinking that the more punitive we can be with offenders the better off we'll be. Unless and until we address their most basic needs we are only promoting instability in the offenders life, putting them at greater risk to again sexually act out.

Drop In Story Time –Tuesdays, from 10:30 to 11 a.m., in the Story Room through the month of March.

Weighing in on driving with cell phones

'Pay attention'

In my opinion, there should be no use of cell phones, except absolutely hands-free cell phones by any vehicle operators throughout the U.S.

Again and again I encounter folks driving through town and on the highways, using their cell phones and thereby diverted from watching the road. When my husband, Dan, and I taught our daughters how to drive, our mantra was, "Pay attention." It's impossible to pay attention if you have the wheel in one hand and a cell phone in the other. Many drivers are now behind the wheels of massive SUVs, difficult to negotiate with or without a cell phone and difficult to rationalize environmentally given an SUV's appetite for finite fossil fuels. Cell phones in hand increase the risk to us all — drivers, passengers, and pedestrians.

Letting go of our cell phones when we're behind the wheel is akin to buckling up as a basic measure of safety and consideration. Our job behind the wheel is singular: "Pay attention!"

The Rev. Jan Carlsson-Bull

'Ran stop sign'

Right on House!

Yes, we should restrict cell phones while driving, young and old.

Near mishaps (I have witnessed) to greater or lesser degree occur at the intersection of North Main and Forest, in Shaw's parking lot, West Corner, and at the driveway of Osgood and Deer Hill schools.

Most recently I saw a car sail through North Main and Forest, dispensing with the stop sign, and the adult driver talking with one hand expressing herself, the other on the wheel, and the phone between her shoulder and chin. She was totally engaged in conversation and had no idea she ran the stop sign.

This year's Quilt Show and Luncheon will take place from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, March 1, at 43 Highland Ave.

Wrap up winter, warm up spring!

"Festivals and Festivities," the church's cookbook, will be on sale for $18.

The 15th annual Quilt Show and Luncheon, hosted by Second Congregational Church in Cohasset, means spring is around the corner. For years, South Shore residents have enjoyed the bright colors and personal designs of local artisans as their handcrafted quilts are displayed at the church.

The show, which began as a way to spend a late winter afternoon, has blossomed into a community favorite and a charitable program that raised more than $20,000 for youth programs.

Each year, approximately 60 quilts are displayed during the show featuring unique designs and patterns. Many designs are inspired by personal experiences of the artist, such as the prints from the Hawaii quilt created from memories of a tropical vacation. A bit of history is always on display at the show as well. This year, the Hourglass quilt, made of 10, 418 pieces, will be on loan from Cohasset Historical Society.

"Festivals and Festivities," the church's cookbook, will be on sale for $18.

The Quilt Show and Luncheon will take place from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, March 1, at 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset. For tickets to the show and luncheon, call Second Congregational Church at 781-383-0345 or purchase tickets at the door. Tickets are $12, and proceeds will benefit Boston Medical Center's Spark Center, Children's AIDS program, and the Reach Out and Read program.

'Healing Field' is planned for Memorial Day

The flags sell for $25 and can be dedicated to anyone. In other words, the purchase of a flag is not limited to those honoring someone who is serving or has served in the Armed Forces.

The Sons of the American Legion is planning to install a Healing Field as part of the town's Memorial Day 2008 observances.

The effort should result in hundreds of American flags on eight-foot-tall poles temporarily installed on the town-owned island at the corner of Border and Summer streets. The island faces Veterans Memorial Park where the annual Memorial Day observances are held.

The flags sell for $25 and can be dedicated to anyone. In other words, the purchase of a flag is not limited to those honoring someone who is serving or has served in the Armed Forces. (Those who purchase flags will be able to pick them up after 10 days).

Checks should be made out to the Sons of the American Legion, with a note on the memo line indicating "Healing Field" and sent to Sons of the American Legion, PO Box 118, Cohasset, MA 02025. For more information, please visit www.healingfield.org/cohasset or contact the Legion post at 781-383-9657 or stop by the post at 98 Summer St. any weekday after 3 p.m., Saturdays after 10 a.m. or Sundays after 12 noon. Applications for Healing Field flags are available at the Post. All proceeds will go to veterans' projects of the Sons of the American Legion.

Skippers tangle at state tournament

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Jack Murphy, Mike Froio and Stephen Hurlbut all made the trek up to the North Shore to take part in the Division 3 Individual State Tournament after qualifying in the south sectionals the previous week. None of the Cohasset standouts placed in the top six during Saturday's meet. Top six in each weight class earns a spot to the All-State.

CHS coach Torin Sweeney was still very proud of the way each of his guys performed.

Murphy (119 pounds) is the first sophomore to win the Div. 3 South Sectional since Ryan Freeman in 1992. He placed top eight at Wakefield High School but couldn't crack the top six. He went 2-2. He lost to Josh Despard (Southwick) and John Toy (Weston) who finished third and fourth respectively.

The 2-0 loss to Toy was a bat-

"He has a very bright future."

tle from the start, but Murphy couldn't manage a two count despite getting the Weston foe on his back a number of times in the match.

Despard won his match against Murphy 9-4. Last year the Southwick wrestler was a state runner-up at 112 pounds. He brought a lot of experience to the mat.

The sky is the limit for Murphy who gained plenty experience of his own over the last few weeks.

"He has a very bright future," Sweeney said.

Froio (Jr., 160) lost his first match to Winchester's Mike Hale, 12-2. He was the only wrestler the Winchester star didn't pin in the first period on his way to a first place finish.

"Mike (Froio) really gave him a good fight and pushed him hard," Sweeney said. "He (Mike Hale) was tired afterward."

Frio pinned his next opponent from Greenfield in the third period and lost his final match against his Burlington opponent 15-11.

"That was a really good experience for him," added Sweeney.

Hurlbut (Sr., 215) capped off his amazing career going 1-2. He pinned his first opponent from Frontier and lost to the eventual champion from Wilmington, 6-0. He also lost to his Josiah's Quincy opponent who finished fourth.

"His career ends but on a high note at the state tournament," Sweeney said.

Seniors go out on high note

Skippers look to improve during off-season

Eric MacCarthy
CORRESPONDENT

With high expectations coming into this season the Cohasset High boys varsity basketball team was unable to live up to the hype. The Skippers failed to make the state tournament, finishing with a 7-13 overall record.

Now they will look to next season.

Despite the disappointment Cohasset pulled out one last win out over South Shore Christian Academy, 71-43, during senior night for Pat McCarthy and Dave Snowdale.

Cohasset appeared to be on a mission right from the tip as it jumped out to an early lead. Focused and determined, the Skippers led 21-8 by the end of the first quarter.

"We wanted the seniors to go out on a high note, a positive note," said Cohasset coach Dorian Bryant.

The Skippers continued their outstanding play throughout the second quarter and never looked back. Led by Snowdale's nine points and McCarthy's eight, which included two three-pointers, Cohasset led SSCA, 38-24, heading into halftime.

Although it seemed almost impossible, Cohasset actually came out playing better in the second half, something the team has done all season. The Skippers defense allowed only seven points in the entire third quarter and Cohasset's offensive attack remained steady dropping 18 points in the third.

The whole gang gets in on the attack against Old Rochester

With the regular season done and seeding set to begin Saturday February 23, it's now watch and wait time for the Cohasset High boys hockey team. The Skippers finished the regular season with a 13-4-3 overall record and a 10-2 mark in the South Shore League.

The boys beat Old Rochester, 5-1, Wednesday night. Anders Goetz (Fr.), Andy McKenna (So.), Pat Doonan (Sr.), RK Quebec (Sr.) and Alex Goetz (Sr.) all scored in the game.

"For us, this game started out like the last game we played ORR," said Cohasset High hockey coach Bob Walsh. "We came out strong in the first and finished the period with a 3-0 lead. Then ORR came back to tie us in the end. Today, however was a bit different with both teams playing for seed position in the Division 3 sectionals, Cohasset played with a bigger sense of urgency.

"The second period was more ORR than it was

State sectional meet results

Scituate/Cohasset swimmers stack up

The Scituate/Cohasset swimmers had an outstanding weekend at the sectionals.

On the girls side, Torey Hart broke her own team record in the 100 breaststroke while diver Betsey Crawford placed second overall, one up from placing third as a freshman. Colby Smalzel placed sixth in the diving portion and her placement marked the only girls team at the sectionals with more than one diver qualifying for the meet.

"Our dive coach Craig Dolloff does an amazing job," stated Sci/Co swim coach Jon Fortin. "He deserves all of the credit for the accomplishments of our dive team."

The boys placed seventh overall, third place out of the public schools, from 40 competing schools. The highlights include Mike Wall who qualified for states in two events off a leading leg of two relays.

Brian McGuiness came in third in the 200 free and second in the 100 free, setting new team records in each. Sean Crowley dropped almost four seconds in his 100 backstroke shattering the old team record by two seconds.

The Sci/Co 400 free relay placed second overall next to BC High.

"I can't even begin to explain how huge of an accomplishment this is," Fortin stated.

Scituate was seeded tenth overall going into the meet and by the end of the race dropped 12 seconds on its season's best time.

When all was said and done, the boys qualified for more individual events for the state divisional championships this weekend than for the state sectional meet this past weekend.

"I am very proud, the guys worked so hard this season and for them to be rewarded with a league championship and amazing results from the state sectional meet like this is very satisfying for me as a coach," Fortin said. "It speaks to how unified this team is and to how committed they are to this program.

"It takes a dedicated student-athlete to ride that bus to Quincy everyday for an hour and a half round trip. It's nice to be able to show the kids that it was worth all the hard work and the sacrifices they have had to make over the past three months."

Patriot League Swimming Championships

The Cohasset/Scituate boys swim team finished the season undefeated (9-0) and won the Patriot League Championships. It was the first time in 12 years a team other than Duxbury won the league.

The following boys results are from the PL meet. All the boys mentioned were named to the league all star team.

Brian McGuiness (Sr., C) placed first in the 200 freestyle and 500 freestyle. Mike Fassnacht (Jr.) placed first in the 50 freestyle. Mike Wall (Sr.) came in first in the 100 freestyle and third in the100 breaststroke.

Jonny Drybanski (Sr., C) came in second in the 200 individual medley and second in the100 breaststroke. Wes Medwid (Jr.) came in third in diving. Jake Kissick (Fr.) placed third in the 200 individual medley, second in the100 fly. Sean Crowley (Jr.) came in third in the100 backstroke. John McGuiness (So.) placed second in the 200 freestyle.

The Scituate-Cohasset boys won all three relays at the league meet (200 medley relay, 200 free relay and 400 free relay).

The girls finished third in the league this year but had a great league championship finishing second. All the following girls were named to the league all star team.

Betsy Crawford (So.) placed first in diving. Megan Little (So.) came in third in the 50 freestyle and second in the100 freestyle.

Torey Hart (Jr.) placed first in the100 breaststroke.

The Scituate-Cohasset girls placed second in the 200-medley relay, third in the 200 freestyle relays and second in the 400 free relays.

Cohasset continued its dominance in the fourth as well, but the highlights of the final quarter were the standing ovations given to Snowdale and McCarthy as they exited the game. Unceremoniously, Snowdale was forced out of the game with his fifth foul in the game with five and a half minutes left. McCarthy lasted until the three-minute mark when he was taken out due to the large lead.

Both received hugs from the whole bench and loud cheers of appreciation from the crowd.

McCarthy and Snowdale also expressed their feelings about the whole situation following the game.

"It's always sad finishing a four-year sport," Snowdale said. "It's been a great experience and the coaching was great."

About never making it to the tournament Snowdale had this to say.

"I gave one hundred percent and expected my teammates to do the same, even though we didn't make it, we played well. We were just were never consistent enough."

McCarthy shared similar thoughts.

"It's different not having basketball anymore, not going to practice with coach but I enjoyed having him (Bryant) all four years."

He went on to talk about not making the tournament.

"It's tough not to make it for me because I played all year round and now I'll never know what that playoff experience will be like."

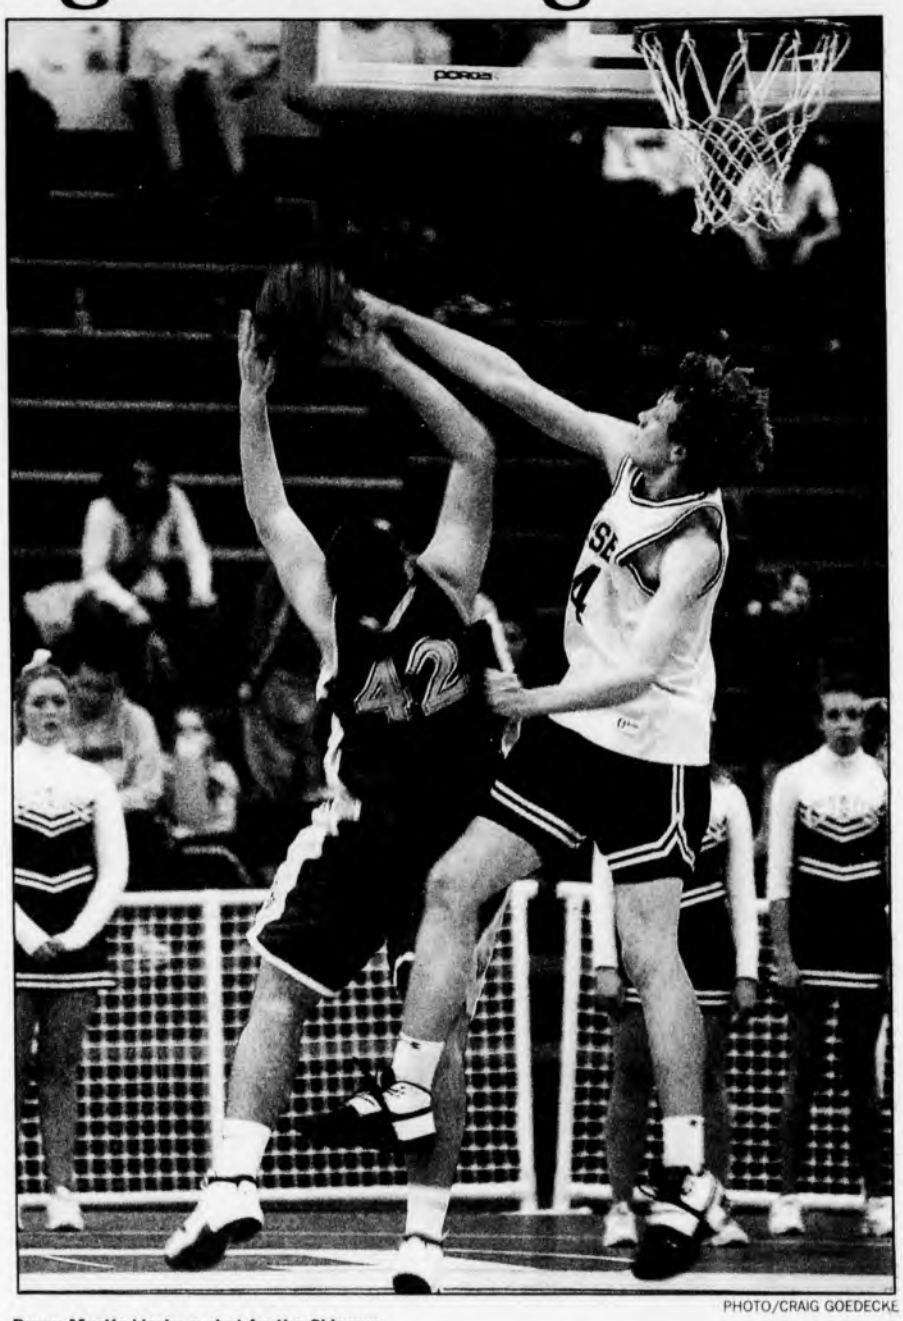
Bryant had a lot to say about his two seniors.

"They have both been great for me, unfortunately we were never able to make the tournament for them."

Bryant also praised the senior pair individually.

"I've grown close to him over these four years and I could always count on him," Bryant said about McCarthy. "David brought it every game and was a very good leader, one of the more vocal players on the team."

Snowdale will be attending Pennsylvania College of Technology next year, and although he won't be playing basketball, he plans to play baseball. McCarthy on the other hand does hope to play basketball next year, but has is undecided.



Both players said a special thanks to coach Bryant and said they will miss the team.

Fortunately, both McCarthy and Snowdale ended their Cohasset basketball careers on high notes, as McCarthy went for 15 points and Snowdale recorded a double-double with 11 points and 10 rebounds. Gordon Smith (Jr.) and sophomore John Maher also recorded double-doubles in the game.

"It was a very up and down," said Bryant about the season. "We didn't improve in some areas that other teams improved in, but it was nice to win the last game for them [McCarthy and Snowdale]."

Bryant also talked a lot about what his team is prepared to do in the off-season and next year. The off-season is something that Bryant has always put a strong focus on.

"This off-season is a big part of it, the kids have got to show the effort and work hard at it," Bryant said.

Cohasset. We weren't playing as well in the second period getting a little too cute for our own good and giving ORR four power-play opportunities. Thanks to Jonny Wade in goal, we were lucky to come out of the period only having given up one goal."

With the score 3-1 going into the third period, Cohasset refocused and went back to doing what it has been doing best by putting two more goals on the board and finishing with a the win.

"Our five goals were scored by five different guys today that for me is a tribute to the way the boys have finished out the regular season," Walsh added. "We had goals from one defenseman and four different forwards. I'm proud of the way the boys played today but we still need to play better hockey and put together three periods of good hockey. We're working on it and hopefully we can bring it in the post season."

Cohasset 8, South Shore Vocational Technical, 4

Chaz Czerkawski (three goals, one assist), Frank Wheelwright (one goal, one assist), Brendan Doonan (one goal, one assist), Andy McKenna (one goal, one assist), Alex Goetz (one goal), Anders Goetz (one goal), Pat Doonan (two assists) and RK Quebec (one assist) all put up points in the win.

The Skippers had a commanding first period in this one.

"This was the hockey I had been waiting for all season," said Walsh. "Jonny Wade played great controlling everything around the net, playing the puck up, controlling rebounds. The defense was covering everyone in position, great breakouts and regroups and the forwards were attacking with both the first and second line scoring goals.

"This had the makings of a tough game for SSV with one exception, I know Derek Mariani, (the coach of the Vikings), and I know he wasn't about to sit back on his senior night and let this happen."

The first period ended with Cohasset leading 3-0.

"Our five goals were scored by five different guys today that for me is a tribute to the way the boys have finished out the regular season,"
Cohasset High hockey coach Bob Walsh

The Vikings came out in the second period and dominated the play and scored four unanswered goals.

"They had Jonny Wade rattled to the point that I had to call a time out to refocus him and the team and get out of the period without any more damage being done. Fortunately, we were able to contain the balance of the period."

Walsh urged his charges on after the bad second period.

"A polite word for what my players might call me is 'passionate,'" Walsh said. "When I came into the locker room, I was passionate to say the least. We made adjustments and refocused and prepared to come out and play our game. I have to give a tremendous amount of credit to my captains and my players.

"We have such a great relationship, there is no misunderstanding my messages when we prepare to play. They listen and ask the questions they need to then they take it and increase their performance as best they can. In most cases, it works out. In this case, it definitely did."

The third period was a new and different game with Cohasset digging in and pulling the trigger, not once or twice but five times. The Czerkawski line and the Goetz line once again scored goals; as did senior defenseman, captain Frank Wheelwright.

"It came from all sides in the third period," Walsh said. "Jonny Wade was back in form and the team played well and finished strong."

A top seed expected for Lady Skippers

Experienced playoff group readies for sectional

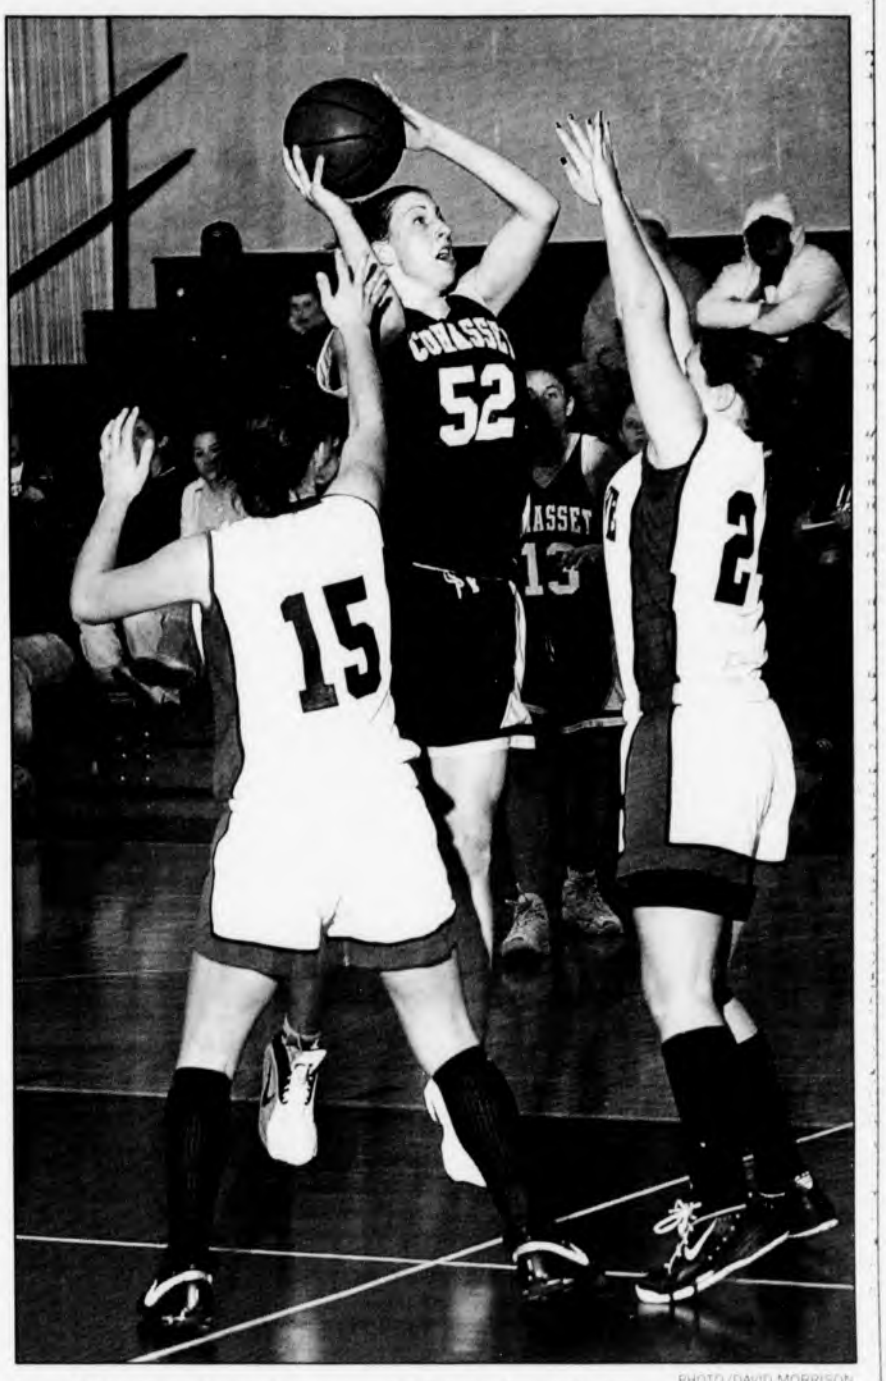
By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

After finishing the regular season with a, 48-24, win over South Shore Christian the Cohasset High girls basketball team is set to get either a two or three seed in the Div. 4 South Sectional tournament. Nantucket lost Wednesday giving them the same 18-2 overall record as the Skippers. A coin flip will decide the matter.

Considering the two and three seed are on the same side of the bracket, with the one and four in the other side, it stands that neither seeding really makes much of a difference.

Avoiding Sacred Heart (the projected number one) until a possible clash in the sectional final is a bonus for winning 18 regular season games. The brackets come out Friday, February 22. Games will begin early next week.

Cohasset will likely get one or even two home games and may play as early as this Tuesday or as late as next Friday.



This is the fifth year in a row the girls have made the tournament under head coach John LeVangie. The Skippers made the sectional semi-finals two years ago. All three senior captains, Carly Salerno, Kayla Farren and Sammi Lehr were there.

Considering each has played over 60 career games, including a pair of playoff appearances, it's safe to say the senior-less Skippers are not inexperienced.

"We are at this point in the year," LeVangie said when asked about his team's level of readiness. "At this point everyone has at least one year under their belts."

Five of the eight teams in the South Shore League are Div. 3 squads. Cohasset's 13-1 first place showing in league should help prepare them. Cohasset also played both sacred Heart (loss) and West Bridgewater (win) during the regular season.

Still, the tournament has a way of working itself out. Often times a lower seed can cause trouble. Seeding is based on records, nothing else.

Sammi Lehr continues to make her presence felt down low for the Skippers.

"The tourney is the luck of the draw," LeVangie said. "Its strictly on wins and losses and some leagues are better than others so playing a team with a .500 record from a strong league can be a real tough game."

Cohasset hasn't had a record like this in LeVangie's five years at the helm, so expectations are high for the girls to make some noise.

Sticking to the basics should do the trick.

"Defense is our best attribute," LeVangie said. "We have held all but three teams under 30 points. Defense is so big in the tournament, it's a lot harder to get open shots."

The girls continue to work hard as a unit and they remain focused at the task in hand.

"They have a great attitude," LeVangie said. "From the Monday after Thanksgiving to today. They never look beyond the next game and it has worked. They improve week by week and that seems to be the key."

IT'S HAPPENING

Afternoon tea with author

Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, Route 3A, Cohasset, will host an afternoon tea for author Anne Easter Smith at 2 p.m., on Sunday, March 9. Smith will be discussing "A Daughter of York," her book of historical fiction about Princess Margaret, a 15th century noble and sister to two kings, King Edward IV and Richard the III.

Life at court, either medieval or 20th century, is rich with detail and intrigue. People are fascinated by the details of fashion, food, ceremony and behavior. Smith's research allows her to recreate Margaret's life and successfully imagine characters who would have been among Margaret's confidantes. Smith grew up in England, Germany and Egypt. At age 24 she moved to the United States. Thirty years later, she is still in the U.S., but her love for English history remains. Her first book was "A Rose for the Crown," her fictionalized story about Richard III. Smith is a member of the Richard III Society and the Historical Novels Society. She currently lives in Newburyport.

This is a free event. Reservations are requested, and can be made by calling Buttonwood at 781-383-2665.

King's celebrates Daffodil Days

Spring fast approaches as indicated by the February launch of Daffodil Days, the uplifting fundraiser held each year by the American Cancer Society. A perennial supporter of this event, King Jewelers Inc. of Cohasset is busy with plans to participate in this worthy endeavor and work diligently as in years past to assist the Society in their charitable efforts.

This will mark the fifth year in which King's will participate in this program, having generated thousands of dollars for the American Cancer Society's regional office during its annual events.

Beginning now through Feb. 29, King's will provide a location for customers, friends and members of the general public to go and place an order for bouquets of the spring flowers. For every two bunches purchased, King's will purchase a third bouquet until the first one hundred bunches have been acquired. Bouquets of cheery daffodils are available for $10 each and consist of 10 stems. One hundred percent of the proceeds generated from the sale of the blossoms is donated to the American Cancer Society.

Orders for the flowers will be accepted through Feb. 29 and the bouquets will be available to be claimed at the store on March 18. As has become an annual tradition, King Jewelers plans a Springtime Party on that day for the pleasure of all who visit to claim their flowers. As Daffodils represent hope and new beginnings, the jewelers choose to carry that theme further with displays of spring previews of new and fresh jewel collections, the introduction of new designers and entertaining activities ,all harbingers of the impending spring season.

According to Sarah Hanison of the regional office of the American Cancer Society, to her knowledge, King Jewelers' festive event is the only one of its nature to make participation in the Daffodil Days Celebration available to the general public. The staff at King Jewelers invites the public to come to the store, order flowers and return for the Spring celebration the week of March 18.

For further information please call Valerie King or Mary Jane Hanron: 617-771-0123 or visit the store's website: www.KingJewelersInc.com .

Active parenting course offered

First Parish Unitarian-Universalist Church, 23 North Main St., will offer a follow-up parenting course to one that is currently underway. The new course for parents of children 4 to 12, "Active Parenting Now," will be held in three sessions Wednesday, Feb. 27, and March 5 and 12, in the living room of the church. A choice of 9:15 to 11:15 a.m. or 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. will be offered.

Perhaps some parents have all the skills they need, but if the following phrases sound familiar to you, this program will be helpful: "Stop teasing your brother, " "Go ask your father," "One more story, but that's it," "Go to sleep now," "Did you clean your room yet," "Pick that up," and "For the last time, no!"

More than 1,000,000 parents have found "Active Parenting Now" entertaining and effective. It is a two-hour, fast moving three-session, video and discussion-based program that teaches both communication and discipline skills that eliminate the power struggle.

You will learn effective methods to instill courage and self-esteem, create cooperative kids, make responsibility a reality, and develop problem-solving techniques. In short, you will understand your child's thinking. Tell a friend and come have some fun.

First Parish Unitarian-Universalist in Cohasset sponsors these courses with financial assistance available through the Social Service League of Cohasset. The program is written by national parenting expert, Dr, Michael Popkin and will be facilitated by Jan Tedeschi of Norwell, known for her active parenting teaching.

The cost is $100 per person for First Parish members, $120 for non-members and a 25 percent discount will be offered for spouses attending the same program. To register, call Parish Administrator, Sandy Bailey, at 781-383-1100. For more information, visit www.askjantedeschi.com

Pianist in concert at St. Stephen's

St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset will be presenting New York pianist Elaine Kwon in recital on the Palm Sunday, March 16, at 3 p.m.. Prize-winning Kwon, DMA, has performed solo and chamber concerts throughout the US, Canada, and Asia. Most recent performances in New York include artist composed and choreographed productions and venues at the Angel Orensanz Theater and Lincoln Center, and a program at Carnegie Hall is in preparation. Dr. Kwon is an Affiliated Artist at MIT in Cambridge, and Ambassador of the Women's World Conference to be held in Bulgaria. Her website is www.elainekwon.com. Elaine has won many prizes in the area of Tai Kwon Do, and had appeared on the Oprah Winfrey Show, as well as hosting her New York television series. Dr. Kwon is known for her clarity in performance and her great technical skill – this is a program not to miss!

The recital will be held in the Music Room at St. Stephen's and will be introduced by music director of the parish, David Baker. A reception will follow the program.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., is handicap accessible, and plenty of parking is available at the village car park. Admission is free, but donations will be accepted. For information, please call 781.383.1083.

Cruise gets passengers up close and personal with Alaska

Fran Golden
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Glacier viewing from Cruise West's Spirit of Yorktown.

Petersburg, Alaska, is a port of call on the Inside Passage itinerary.

Aboard the Spirit of Yorktown - "Whale" someone shouts, and everyone rushes to the large windows that line the dining room's starboard side. You almost expect the small ship to tip over.

Out the window there's a hump and then a spout, practically at eye level.

And then there's a shout from the port side. And everyone rushes to the windows there, pushing dining chairs out of the way as they go, banging their cameras on the tableware.

The view is two killer whales, their backs distinctively black and white.

It is exciting and fabulous, until a lady seated on the port side declares, "Our whales are better than yours."

And the wildlife-viewing competition is on.Those of us on the starboard side head back to our tables to finish a fine meal but keep our binoculars at hand, just in case. The crowd - mostly active retirees but some younger folks as well - are all fired up.

You come onboard the 138-passenger Spirit of Yorktown to explore Alaska from the close-up vantage point of a comfortable small ship and it doesn't disappoint.

There are no casinos, no show productions, no spas and gyms. In fact, there is not even TV or Internet (bringing a good book to read is highly recommended). There is no need to dress up or make a fuss - pack your hiking boots, not your heels.

Most of the cabins are small and outfitted with twin beds (although four suites with queen-size beds and balconies were added in a fall refurbishment). And other than the lower-deck dining room and plentiful open deck space, the only other public room on the 257-foot ship is a big lounge with a bar in the corner that serves as a relaxation and conversational hub, and doubles as a snack venue and lecture hall with rangers and scientists and Native American speakers coming onboard.

And that is where the sights come in. On our week on the Yorktown's Inside Passage itinerary, from Juneau to Ketchikan, we spotted many whales, dozens of bald eagles and numerous other creatures of sea, sky and land. All wildlife sightings were recorded by the crew, a list posted daily.

There was even a giant brown bear that thrillingly stood on his feet to show us his full 10-foot height. We watched him through binoculars from the safety of our ship.

Come to Southeast Alaska and you quickly know where you are. And it is like no place else. What grabs you is both the vastness and how much of the land is protected - when President Jimmy Carter signed the act preserving national parks in Alaska, he doubled the size of the U.S. national parks system.

Most days on our Alaska cruise, passengers bundled up against the chill - summer temperatures can get down to the 40s - and spent time on the open decks trying to take everything in.

In the 3.3 million-acre Glacier Bay National Park, glaciers can shed Hilton Hotel-size chunks to a sound that has aptly been called "White Thunder." From a safe distance we were treated to a show and could feel the ripples under our ship as a mammoth piece of glacier loudly broke off and collided with the water.

Another day, Misty Fjords National Monument offered whales and views of giant granite rocks in a waterfront park the size of Connecticut.

Our crew was as enthusiastic about the sights as we were. Many were college students working their summer breaks. They were in Alaska to see as well as serve - even the bartenders kept binoculars close at hand so they wouldn't miss anything.

While there is a rush involved in group sightings, the experience on the Yorktown is not about adventure. There are short complimentary tours at each port, but if you want to get active, you need to do so on your own or on paid shore excursions at the ports.

I tried a thrilling Zipline excursion ($169 per person) in Juneau, strapping on a harness and literally zipping from platform to platform above the treetops of a rainforest, my gloved hand forming an ad hoc brake.

Later, near the historic Gold Rush town of Skagway, I hit a hiking trail that brought me far enough into the wilderness that I thought I spotted a wild wolf. Except on closer inspection the "wolf" turned out to be someone's dog. That sighting did not get written down.

There were opportunities to kayak including in stunningly scenic Haines, which is the kind of funky little Alaska town that must have influenced the TV show "Northern Exposure." There's even a bar where the lumberjacks hang out.

The ship also called at Sitka, which boasts a Russian heritage; the small fishing village of Petersburg, which prides itself on its Norwegian roots; and the Native Tsimshian village of Metlakatla (complimentary dance performances were offered at Petersburg and Metlakatla).

To be clear, the onboard pace of a Spirit of Yorktown cruise is slow. Organized entertainment and activities are nonexistent and there is no shipboard nightlife.

Still, there are your binoculars and the thrill of sightings to get you through the day.

Shop owner has a love for 'all things French'

La Petite Maison celebrates 10th anniversary

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

It's not unusual for diners leaving the Square Café to step inside La Petite Maison next door.

Shared interior windows between the cafe and the French-inspired boutique offer restaurant patrons a birds-eye view of the eye-catching array of fine French linens, antiques, decorative accessories, French pottery, soaps, fragrances, and candles, French-made hand-braided lavender sachet ornaments, and baby gifts nestled into every nook and cranny.

Once inside, the sounds of French music and the scent of French soaps fill the air. "I have a love for all things French," said owner Nanette Walsh, who lives in Hingham and travels to France once a year.

The shop specializes in personal service and design consultation and draws customers from Hingham, Cohasset, Braintree, Weymouth, Scituate, Norwell, Duxbury, Milton, and other communities.

"Our offerings range from a $3.50 bar of French soap to bed ensembles," Walsh said. "Many of the items sold here are imported from France or have a French influence."

La Petite Maison is one of the leading shops south of Boston that specialize in French and other fine imported linens.

The boutique features handsomely dressed antique beds, lush Matouk towels, Yves Delorme bedding, elegant Juliska glassware, needlepoint pillows, and vintage silver and porcelain.

The recent addition of unique decoupage accessories by John Derian has met with enthusiasm. Derian uses unusual antique flower, fruit, and animal prints and centuries-old ledgers and letters that are reprinted and pieced together in layers to create collages under glass accessories. La Petite Maison is among the few shops that have been selected to carry the Derian line of plates, platters, and paperweights.

The shop also carries the exclusive "Atelier du Vieil Apt" line of marbleized pottery from Provence.

Walsh attributes the boutique's success to fine customer service. "We know our customers very well," she said. "Besides knowing their names and saying hello when they walk through the door, we also know what their favorite soap or candle is, what pattern their linens are, or what color towels they have," she said. "Customer service is first and foremost our specialty."

An example of this is the time when a rush order for some new bedding was made for a regular customer who needed it in time for a wedding that was taking place at her home. "It arrived on Saturday, the day of the wedding," Walsh recalled. "So I personally went to her house to make up the beds while the wedding ceremony was going on in their yard and placed mints on the pillows before I left. Needless to say, it was a pretty stressful situation that worked out well for everyone."

A broad range of services is offered to customers, from matching wallpaper in a bathroom to new towels and bath rugs to creating an entire bedroom ensemble. "We spend the time with our customers to ensure what they select is exactly what they want," Walsh said.

Located in the heart of Hingham Square at 142 North St., La Petite Maison has much to celebrate these days besides its expansion plans. That's because the shop recently received "Best Home Accessories South of Boston" awards from two leading magazines. "Boston" praised La Petite Maison as "the undisputed attention getter . . . brimming with French-inspired panache."

STAFF PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

One can find a number of French items in La Petite Maison in Hingham Square.

Nanette Walsh stands outside her store La Petite Maison that has been in Hingham Square for the past 10 years. La Petite Maison is expanding into the former Bowl & Board space and will now have 1750 square feet.

La Petite Maison has expansion plans

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

This year marks Hingham Square's La Petite Maison's 10th anniversary, with plans to expand not only the size of the shop (to include the space most recently occupied by Bowl & Board after it was downsized a few years ago) but also its custom design activity.

Renovations to the new space, including opening up the wall in-between the current and new space and installing new lighting, began this month.

"I want to create a clean and fresh space in keeping with the current shop," said owner Nanette Walsh. She travels to France once a year on a combined pleasure and buying mission to shop the markets for unusual antique and decorative objects. She even offers travel advice upon request.

After leaving the corporate world a decade ago, Walsh, who frequented antique shows across New England, decided to open a shop with a French theme in downtown Hingham. This was based on a love of France cultivated during trips to the French countryside with her husband, Dan.

"I was looking for something exciting to do that would allow my creativity to flow," Walsh said. "I was nervous about opening up my first store, but with encouragement from family and friends I went for it."

With a small antique business already going, Walsh acted on her dream to own a shop with a French theme in late 1998 by opening La Petite Maison at 53 South St. in half of the 800-square foot space previously occupied by Maxwell's candy store. A woodcraft shop already occupied the other half.

Walsh's first sale was a piece of English china. Sometime later she sold the one bed she had room for in the small shop and then worried about getting another one right away to feature all her lovely fine linen – sheeting, duvets, coverlets, blankets, and bed skirts — "made from Egyptian cotton, which is the finest available – soft and luscious," Walsh said.

When the wood shop closed less than a year later, La Petite Maison expanded into that space because business was so good.

In 2003, La Petite Maison moved just around the corner to its current location at 142 North St. when Bowl & Board was downsized. This was about the same time the Square Café opened next door. The walls are painted in stripes of La Petite Maison's signature periwinkle blue and whimsical French motifs, and customers can see into the Square Café through a window in the dividing wall.

Incorporating the remainder of the former Bowl & Board space will increase the current space by 750 square feet, for a total of 1,750 square feet.

The design consultation area will be expanded to better meet customers' decorating needs, complete with worktable, hanging swatches, and color samples. Walsh plans to increase the staff and to offer one-on-one consultation.

Some new lines and items being added, including chandeliers and decorative furniture. The popular baby section, which features crib bedding, fine baby gifts, and the popular line of collectable German-made Steiff animals "that remind people of their childhood" will be expanded.

The new space will also include a "French Market" featuring market baskets and gourmet foods such as Dijon mustard, Provencal honey and jams, herbs from Provence, sea salts, Brittany butter cookies, and French teas.

Walsh shares the credit for the shop's success with her employees. Ann Logue, the assistant manager, has been working with Walsh for nine years. Mary McLellan, who has since retired, was with Walsh from the beginning and stayed on for five years.

La Petite Maison is among Cohasset resident Elaine Breslow's favorite shops. "In opening La Petite Maison, Nan was a pioneer in that there wasn't and isn't anything else like it in Hingham or on the South Shore," she said. "There's a nice selection of European linens and decorative accessories. When you walk in, you feel comfortable. There's no feeling of pressure. Besides, how many places can you shop and at the same time get advice on the best place to get a hot chocolate in Paris?! I really believe that Nan helped change the landscape of downtown Hingham to what it is today."

Once inside the shop, it's hard for customers to pull themselves away. When they finally leave, signs on the doors leading to North Street thank them for their business and invite them to come back again – "Merci, Au Revoir" and "Merci à bientôt." Who could resist?

WHEN DAY CAMP IS CHILD CARE:
Benefits Exist for the Entire Family By Bette S. Bussel, Executive Director

• Sending a dependent child under the age of 13 to day camp so a parent can work or attend school qualifies as a dependent care expense. The size of the tax benefit allowable by law varies because it is based on parent income. I recommend that parents consult an accountant or tax advisor about how to claim this benefit, which can save a family hundreds of dollars annually. This tax benefit applies only to day camps, not overnight camps.

• Day camps offer safe, child-centered environments away from home. Several benefits of a quality day camp experience include increased self-confidence and self esteem, improved independence and leadership skills and enhanced social skills. Playing and learning with other children in a non-academic setting develops many skills that children will use when they return to school. Individual and group decision making opportunities, activities that foster cooperation and compromise, practice in taking directions from adults other than parents and teachers, and encouragement to try new things and take safe risks are some day camp experiences that directly influence children's learning and development.

• Don't assume that day camp regulation and child care regulation are the same. State regulations vary. It's a very good idea to ask how and by whom a day camp is regulated. Ask about accreditation also. The voluntary ACA accreditation process assures the best kind of quality control in the area of camp most important to the welfare of children. ACA standards extend beyond basic requirements for health, cleanliness and food service into specific areas of programming and activities, staff management and emergency training. Visit www.campparents.org/safety.php for more information about ACA accreditation.

• Some day camps with hours that don't match the traditional work day offer before and/or after camp care for the campers. Ask about where before and after camp care takes place, how the children are grouped, which staff members care for the children, what activities are offered, and what additional fees are involved. Additional day camp search considerations include transportation, lunch, rainy day logistics, and how camp-home communication takes place.

• Day camps offer optimal environments for children during the summer! While parents are at work or school, day campers have the chance to learn and experience so many activities, many of them in the out-of-doors. Sunshine-filled days with friends, swimming lessons, nature hikes, picnics, non-competitive games, skill building and competition in a variety of individual and team sports, opportunities to create and experience fine and performing arts, safe risk-taking activities and many more are in store for your child at day camp!

Youth Ministry to host family event

A special evening, sponsored by the St. Anthony and St. Paul Youth Ministry, will take place Saturday, March 1. There will be a presentation and reflection by the Youth Ministry group on last summer's trip to New Orleans and the upcoming trip to Louisville, Ken. See what the youth of both parishes are doing for those less fortunate.

This is sure to be an uplifting and fun event, so gather family and friends to attend. There will be food, silent auction and raffles.

For tickets and information, contact Bette Baker at 781-383-7310 or betbaker@Comcast.net; Lindsey Watson at 781-749-7310, boomerw@comcast.net; or youth minister Bill Mezzetti at 781-589-0911, billmezzetti@yahoo.com.

Braintree Forum, Cohasset Mariner, Duxbury Reporter, Hanover Mariner, Hingham Journal, Kingston Mariner, Marshfield Mariner, Norwell Mariner, Old Colony Memorial, Pembroke Mariner & Reporter, Plymouth Bulletin, Scituate Mariner, Wareham Courier, Weymouth News

We know there are many bright, talented and caring young adults in our communities, and this year, a special section entitled "The Best & The Brightest" will appear in the COHASSET MARINER to celebrate their accomplishments.

Please help us find these remarkable teens and young adults by filling out the nomination form on this page. You can nominate an individual between the ages of 16 and 21 who, you believe, deserves to be honored, whether it be for academic achievement, volunteerism, athletics, artistic acumen or the pursuit of excellence in another field. Here's your opportunity to get involved.

You can bring the form to the Community Newspaper Company office at 182 Standish Ave., Plymouth, MA 02360 or mail the form to Beth Doyle, or fax the form to 508-591-6601.

All entries will be considered by a selection panel, and successful nominees will be interviewed and photographed. During the week of May 26th, Community Newspaper Company will include "The Best & The Brightest," a special section devoted to sharing as many of the stories and photographs of those nominated as possible.

Help available from 'Are You OK?' program

An 84-year-old Weymouth woman remained under observation at South Shore Hospital recently after an officer from Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti's "Are You OK?" program summoned emergency help when the woman failed to answer her daily morning phone call.

The "Are You OK?" officer notified a neighbor who tried to enter the woman's home to check on her, but found the door bolted. The officer then called the police, who forced their way inside and found the woman sitting in a back room of the home in which she lived by herself. She was disoriented and was helped into an ambulance to be taken to South Shore Hospital, where she remains under observation.

This episode marked the 54th "save" for "Are You OK?" officers since Bellotti introduced the program and made it available at no cost to all Norfolk County residents in 2001.

"Time and time again, this program helps families avoid potentially tragic situations by getting medical care to elderly people living alone whose problems might otherwise go unnoticed," Bellotti said.

Each morning, "Are You OK?" officers place nearly 300 phone calls to elderly Norfolk County residents who live by themselves. The daily well-being check helps ensure their safety and provides peace of mind to program participants as well as their children and younger loved ones.

For more information about "Are You OK?" or to sign up for the free program, call a program officer at 781-751-3504.

Heating safety during winter months

To help keep our community safe and warm this season, the Cohasset Fire Department recommends that you follow these heating guidelines:

- Space heaters need space. Keep all things that can burn, such as paper, bedding or furniture, at least 3 feet away from heating equipment.
- Turn portable heaters off when you go to bed or leave the room.
- Plug power cords only into outlets with sufficient capacity and never into an extension cord.
- Inspect for cracked, frayed or broken plugs or loose connections. Replace before using.
- Have your chimney inspected each year and cleaned if necessary.
- Use a sturdy fireplace screen.
- Allow ashes to cool before disposing. Dispose of ashes in a metal container.
- Install smoke alarms in every bedroom, outside each sleeping area and on every level of the home. For the best protection interconnect all smoke alarms throughout the home – when one sounds, they all sound. Test smoke alarms at least once a month.
- Install and maintain a carbon monoxide alarm in a central location outside each sleeping area.
- Never use an oven to heat your home.

With simple precautions, help the fire department meet its goal of decreasing home-heating fires this winter.

OBITUARIES

Betty Lou Pearce

Loved home, family, cooking

Betty Lou (Priestley) Pearce, 84, of Cohasset, died Feb. 15, 2008, of a stroke.

Born in Kansas and brought up in Florida, where her southern charm captured her husband at first glance, she studied to be a teacher at Florida State Women's College, now Florida State University. Ever since, she enjoyed debate and was a member of the Discussion Club. She was filmed in a Tarzan movie with Johnny Weismuller while working for Wakulla Springs in Florida before World War II.

Mrs. Pearce was a member of Cohasset Yacht Club for decades. She also enjoyed gardening and was a member of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset for some years. She was an avid tennis player, skier and bowler until she suffered her first stroke in 1993.

Her family will miss her cooking, through which, she expressed her love and sense of elegance and balance in taste. Her graceful touch enlivened all she befriended.

Wife of 58 years of the late Mauran "Pete" Pearce Jr., she leaves her children, Kathy of San Francisco, Calif., Mitchell of San Jose, Calif., Peter of Cohasset and Elizabeth of Sea Cliff, Long Island, N.Y.; her daughters-in-law, Ansley and Maggie; and her grandchildren, Douglas, Nathan and Lucas.

A celebration of her life was held at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset. Arrangements by McNamara Sparrell Funeral Home.

Betty Lou Pearce

Memorial donations may be made to South Shore Hospital Foundation, 55 Fogg Road, Weymouth, MA 01290-2455.

The Rev. Mpho A. Tuto speaks at the abbey on Feb. 28.

R Reverend Tutu at inter-religious series

The Glastonbury Abbey continues its inter-religious lecture series, "Listening to Other Voices – Prophets of Compassion: Who Cares," with the Rev. Mpho A. Tuto, who will present "Pilgrims on this Earthly Journey: We Who Must Care," at 7:15 p.m., Thursday, Feb. 28, in the Glastonbury Conference Center at 16 Hull St. in Hingham.

The Rev. Mpho A. Tutu has taught, studied, ministered and preached in a variety of venues as diverse as Worcester and Grahamstown, South Africa. At varying times, she has worked with children, seminarians, mothers, and rape survivors and their families. From her personal experience, she knows well the matter of pilgrims, and those who must care. An Episcopal priest, she now serves as Assisting Priest at Holy Comforter Episcopal Church in Washington, D.C. Program on Israel at Sha'aray Shalom Congregation Sha'aray Shalom and AIPAC invite the public to a special adult education program featuring Yaakov Katz, military correspondent and defense analyst for the Jerusalem Post, at 7:30 p.m., on Thursday, Feb. 28, at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham. Refreshments will be served.

Katz's presentation will focus on Israel's security situation a year after the Lebanon War, and Israel's current strategic assessments with a particular look at the threats from Syria, Iran and Hezbollah. Katz's presentation will also tackle the differences between Israel and United States intelligence on the Iranian threat, and Israel's various options. This is of particular importance given the recent release of the threat assessment concerning Iran's nuclear program.

Register by Monday, Feb. 25, by calling the temple office at 781-749-8103 or by emailing CSSADM@AOL.COM.

Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St. 781-383-0808. Interim Pastor: Richard Chamberlain; Please join us for Sunday Service and Sunday School at 10 a.m. followed by fellowship in Merritt Hall. Accepting donations of new socks for homeless shelters and non-perishable food items for local food pantries.

Bible Study series continues on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Practical Christianity. Some Christians commonly view the Old Testament as a storybook-full of fascinating tales, yet ancient and irrelevant to modern reality. This exceptional 10-week study from Insight For Living with Chuck Swindoll will help you blow the dust off these timeworn chronicles and discover enduring truths that relate directly to you, while translating into reliable patterns for godly living. Experience familiar passages as never before, and find fresh inspiration in the memorable scenes revisited. Follow the examples of faithful Old Testament heroes such as Abraham, Joseph, David, and many others as you learn to apply timeless biblical principles to your everyday life. Please join us.

Our mission statement is: "Equipping God's people for living out the Good News to be the hands, feet, voice and heart of Christ in our community and in the world." How should we accomplish this? Come hear sermons to find out.

The Painted Ladies art exhibit opens on Feb. 29

What do you get when you combine four award-winning female artists all with a sense of humor, fun, and an affinity for puns?

"The Painted Ladies" — artists Susan Benoit and Maria Hopkins of Duxbury, Gayle Loik of Hanover, and Heidi Mayo of Plymouth come together to bring you an eclectic feast of fine art at the South Shore Natural Science Center, 48 Jacobs Lane (just off Rte 123), Norwell, Feb. 29 through April 5, 2008. Meet the artists at an opening reception on Sunday, March 2, from 2 to 4 p.m.

Complementing one another, but each with her own unique style, they are masters (or better yet, mistresses) of their palettes with pastels, watercolor, acrylic, photography and mixed media, creating a cornucopia of works from plein air landscapes to still lifes, portraits, architectural and abstract art. Free admission. Gallery hours are Monday through Saturday, 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. For information call Susan Benoit at 339-832-0046.

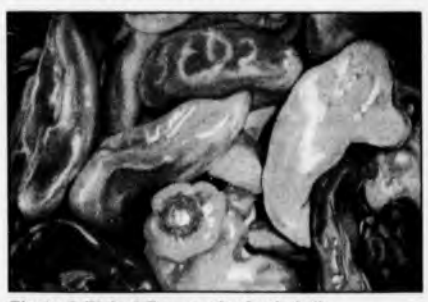
The Painted Ladies met while working with local pastel artist Donna Rossetti-Bailey. Among them, they share techniques and tips picked up in workshops and classes with renowned artists such as Albert Handell, Liz Haywood-Sullivan, Maggie Price, Dick McEvoy, and Doug Dawson. Their memberships include Duxbury Art Association, Plymouth Guild for the Arts, North River Arts Society, Pastel Painters Society of Cape Cod, South Shore Arts Center, and others. Over the years, all four have enjoyed the honors of numerous awards and works exhibited in juried shows.

Susan Benoit, Gayle Loik, Heidi Mayo and Maria Hopkins are the Painted Ladies.

Susan Benoit paints in both acrylics and pastels, though her training included graduate work in oils, printmaking and design. After many years as an interior designer, Susan appreciates the luxury of time to return to fine art. "Capturing the play of light and shadow is both a challenge and a pleasure, both here on the South Shore and in my travels," says Susan. Landscape and archi-tecture are her favorite subjects. www.susanbenoit.com

Gayle a. Loik paints watercolors and pastels. After 25 years in fashion and commercial art, she now enjoys creating fine art and teaching adults and children at the Pembroke Library and Michael's Arts and Crafts. Gayle says, " I love to paint anything and everything!" artngayle1@aol.com

Maria Hopkins is a talented photographer and pastel painter who creates beautiful fine art note cards from her photos and paintings. Maria says, "I have a passion for pastels; I love the immediacy, how I can push them around on the paper, and especially painting landscapes en plein air." Maria's studio is in the Wright Building in Rockland. wellnotedartcards.blogspot.com



Heidi Mayo, pastels and mixed media, attended classes at Vesper George School of Art in her youth and has been doing art of one kind or another ever since. She teaches pastel painting to adults and children privately and for the Plymouth Guild. Heidi loves painting landscapes en plein air and teaching her students to, "Put the brain down, pick the pastels up, and let the divinity of creation flow through you." www.heidimayo.com

Dickinson Gallery presents "The Luminous Landscape" through Feb. 29

The Dickinson Art Gallery is hosting a special exhibit called "The Luminous Landscape", now through Friday, Feb. 29, featuring the art of encaustic painting, Six artists who work in this ancient medium, where hot wax is fused with pigment to create a painting, will display their work. The artwork is exciting to see, because the encaustic medium interacts with light to create an exciting luminosity to landscapes and familiar scenes.

The public is invited at a reception to meet the artists on Sunday, Feb. 24, from 1 to 3 p.m. at the gallery, located at 1132 Main St., in Weymouth. Admission is free and off-street parking is available at no charge. The exhibit can be seen daily Wednesday through Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 5 p.m. Call 781-331-3384 for information or visit www.dickinsonartgallery.com

Artwork by Lindsay Bentis

Six artists are exhibiting at this event: Charyl Weissbach of Boston and Janet Bartlett Goodman of Brookline, who organized the exhibit, and four other artists: Lindsay Bentis of Wellesley, Dorothy Simpson Krause of Marshfield, Julie Shaw-Lutts of Salem, and Tracy Spadafora of Westborough.

Charyl Weissbach credits Joanne Mattera, another Massachusetts artist, as her mentor in encaustic painting. Mattera wrote a basic book on the subject, The Art of Encaustic Painting, published in 2001.

"Luminous Landscapes" Will Travel

With many New England artists doing encaustic work, Ms. Mattera suggested the concept of "luminous landscapes" to introduce the paintings to a wider audience in several different locations. The Dickinson Gallery is one of the first three to offer the exhibit.

The artists in this exhibit have employed encaustic as a unique means for exploring the subtle and mesmerizing affinity imparted by our surroundings," she says. The vivid color and translucent properties of encaustic is uniquely able to convey nature's vastness and its mysterious allure.

"Encaustic painting was known to the ancient Egyptians, who painted encaustic portraits for the mummies in their tombs," she said. A fabulous find at the Fayum area in Egypt produced a large collection of encaustics that remained as fresh and vivid as new paintings, because of the encaustic medium itself, and the dry atmospheric conditions in Egypt.

Dorothy Simpson-Krause of Marshfield is a painter and collage-maker focusing on both traditional and digital mixed media. She is a retired professor from Massachusetts College of Art, where she founded their Computer Art Center. She is a pioneer in digital media, and is co-author of The Digital Art Studio, published in 2004. Her paintings start with digital images on a special textured surface, and her encaustic landscapes are said to "have an unusual surreal quality that captivates the viewer, and deepens our appreciation for the grandeur of nature's pristine quality."

Cheryl Weissbach of Boston holds a BFA degree from Massachusetts College of Art in painting and art history, after studying fashion design and sculpture. She is a member of the South Boston Arts Association, SoWa Artist Guild, New England Wax (an encaustic organization) and the United South End Artists, a very active Boston group. In the Dickinson show, she has a dramatic landscape, 36-inches wide, called "Annie's Sunrise." A glowing sky in sunrise tones of red and pink, with touches of white clouds, is set off against by a dark impressionist foreground that suggests dark trees. She says that she "derives great pleasure in reinterpreting the landscape, and says her work is "a combination of drawing, abstraction and impressionism." She uses Belgian linen for encaustic paintings "to create the illusion of timelessness, and expansiveness," through paintings that are "tranquil, atmospheric, and luminous."

Lindsay Bentis of Wellesley is a BFA graduate of Boston University and holds a Master of Fine Arts degree from American University in Washington. She says she used to paint beach scenes in oil, but when she entered encaustics, she began to paint landscapes with ovals and circles instead of actual objects. "That oval there might be a rock," she said," but it's still part of a landscape." her "Untitled: Blue" in The Luminous Landscape is an example She is intrigued small parts of the landscape, rather than the whole vast space.

Janet Bartlett Goodman of Brookline paints trees and forests. She earned a BFA degree at Massachusetts College of Art, but says, "My background is in product design, so for me, materials and processes are very important. "We have a place way up in the Adirondacks" she says, "where we're surrounded by trees." She takes photographs and then paints stands of trees. She says loves the actual encaustic painting process, even the smell of the warm beeswax is pleasant. She paints directly on the board, without using any mixed media effects like collage or photographs.. "You paint with the hot wax and a brush in layers." Her landscapes are described as "ongoing patterns of nature's forest that speak of mystery and grandeur."

Middle schoolers enjoy engineering lab

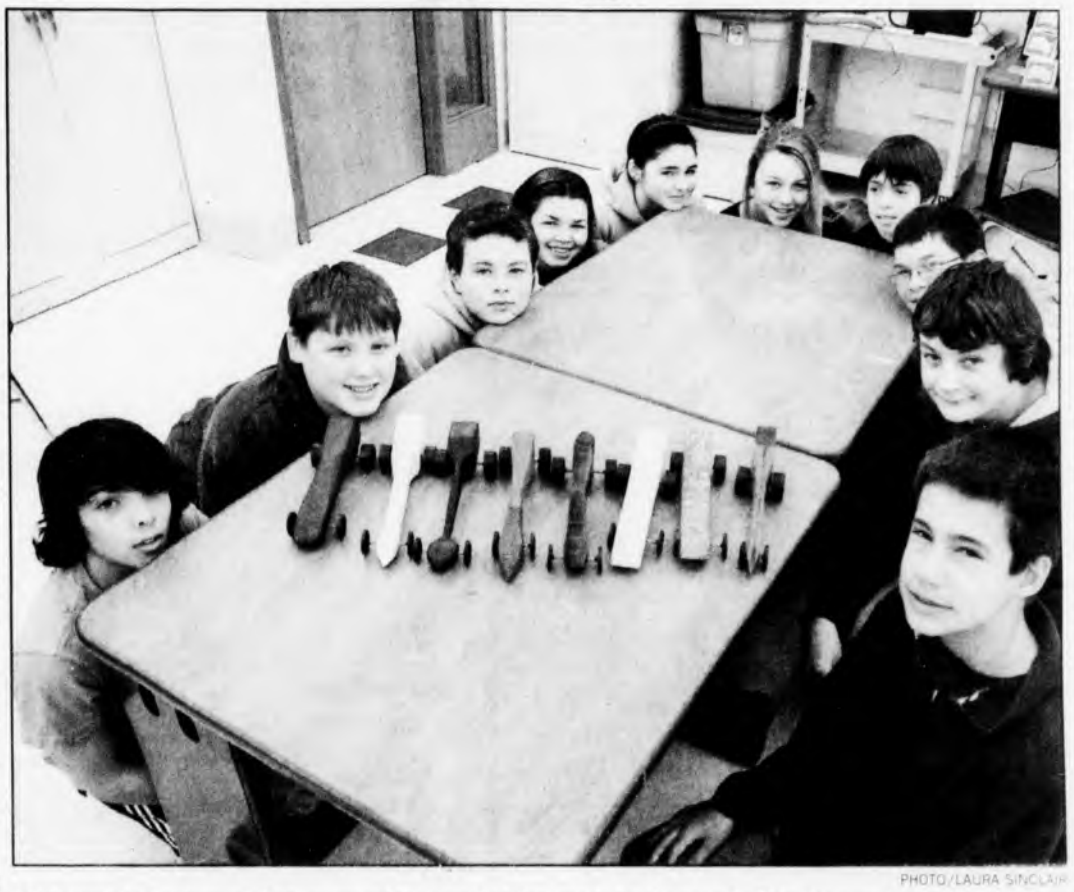
By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

A race car. A CD case. A golf tee. A blueprint. A robot.

These seemingly unrelated objects have one thing in common — they are being designed and constructed at the Cohasset Middle School.

The recently completed technology and engineering lab is up and running and classes of sixth, seventh and eighth graders are getting hands-on experience in a cross section of engineering disciplines.

Thanks to the funding provided by a joint effort of the PSO and the Cohasset Education Foundation (CEF) the lab was integrated into the curriculum this year.



The Paxton/Patterson technology lab is computer-based learning with tangible activities to give practical application to the concepts.

"It's an introduction to technology. We're trying to build technology literacy," said teacher David Young, "the US is lagging behind the rest of the industrial world in math, science, technology and engineering."

The program gives students a foundation and could spark an early interest in engineering for many students.

"The benefit is the students learn to apply math and science through technology" helping students to internalize

Art Center class captures the botanical

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

There may still be snow on the ground and the temperatures are still frigid, but inside the South Shore Art Center there is a sure sign of spring — flowers.

A weekly botanical art class is channeling the beauty and intricacies of nature's plants into works of art. Led by accomplished botanical artist Sarah Roche, the all-female class is a mixture of beginners and seasoned botanical artists. For the fourth year in a row, artists from the class will be displaying a selection of their work at the upcoming New England Flower Show at the Bayside Expo Center in Boston.

Many of the women were attracted to the class because of its interesting subject, a few of them are avid gardeners,

Pool in pipeline

Possible renovation at Swim Center

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Swim Center is a favorite summertime haunt, but some say it could be much more than that. Plans are afoot to look turn the outdoor pool into a year-round multi-use facility.

The project is in its infancy, but Bill Burnett, one of the organizers of the project, came before the Community Preservation Committee to introduce the potential community project and discuss where CPC might fit into the equation down the line.

"We have a facility that's very old and needs help. It's aging and there is no handicap access," said Burnett, who also is founder and race director of the Cohasset Triathlon.

Along with Deborah Thomas, Burnett is spearheading an effort to investigate the feasibility of a new facility with an indoor pool on the swim center land. He and Thomas are working separately but with the support of the Board of Directors who oversees the day-to-day operations of the Swim Center. The Swim Center is a privately owned, non-profit organization.

The current pool is a six-lane pool with a diving board used only during the summer months. Built 35 years ago, the swim center relies on memberships and donations to maintain the facility. The Swim Center sits on a 3.65 acre piece of land off Sohier Street.

'Healing Field' is planned for Memorial Day

The Sons of the American Legion is planning to install a Healing Field as part of the town's Memorial Day 2008 observances.

The effort should result in hundreds of American flags on eight-foot-tall poles temporarily installed on the town-owned island at the corner of Border and Summer streets. The island faces Veterans Memorial Park where the annual Memorial Day observances are held.

The flags sell for $25 and can be dedicated to anyone. In other words, the purchase of a flag is not limited to those honoring someone who is serving or has served in the Armed Forces. (Those who purchase flags will be able to pick them up after 10 days).

Checks should be made out to the Sons of the American Legion, with a note on the memo line indicating "Healing Field" and sent to Sons of the American Legion, PO Box 118, Cohasset, MA 02025. For more information, please visit www.healing-field.org/cohasset or contact the Legion post at 781-383-9657 or stop by the post at 98 Summer St. any weekday after 3 p.m., Saturdays after 10 a.m. or Sundays after 12 noon. Applications for Healing Field flags are available at the Post. All proceeds will go to veterans' projects of the Sons of the American Legion.

Selectmen won't silence noisy leaf blowers

Say proposal not ready for primetime

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Should Cohasset limit the use of gas-powered leaf blowers?

Marcus Ramsden of 262 Jerusalem Road thinks so. To that end, he is sponsoring a Citizens Petition that could be debated at the annual Town Meeting on March 29.

Cohasset voters can insert an article in the Warrant by obtaining the signatures of at least 10 registered voters.

However, if the cool reception for the article at Monday's Selectmen's meeting is a gauge then Ramsden could have a tough road to win approval to the proposed bylaw. "The proposal is to limit the use of gas-generated leaf blowers to 9 a .m. to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday," Ramsden told Selectmen.

He said a $200 fine would be levied on homeowners who use the devices outside those specific hours and days.

"What people need is access to the world of natural sounds not in Vermont or on cable but here in this town," Ramsden said.

While Selectmen agreed Ramsden's idea of creating a better environment is a good one – they were not sure if leaf blower noise is an issue in town.

Selectman Paul Carlson said lawnmowers were noisier. "I have not seen this as a nuisance," he said about leaf blowers.

Selectman Ted Carr, who was serving as chairman in Selectman Gary Vanderweil's absence, asked if the bylaw was about more than noise.

"Is this to protect the environment from gas use or just sound?" he asked. "I have an old electric one (leaf blower) that is louder than the dickens."

Selectman Fred Koed wanted more information about how extensive the problem is in Cohasset.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer was the most vocal about the issue. He said while he is not opposed in general to some kind of ordinance, homeowners would need the opportunity over time to buy quieter equipment.

He objected to levying fines and said the time restrictions could effect people who work long hours, including half of Saturday, and must do their lawn work in the evenings or Sundays.

Carr also said he was concerned how the bylaw would affect all parties, including commercial landscapers.

Peter Buckley of Buckley Landscaping stated in a Feb. 22 letter to Selectmen that was provided to the board, Ramsden and the press at Monday's meeting that the restriction could result in higher costs, especially for spring and fall cleanups; a decrease in the availability of landscape services; and a potential decrease in the quality of those services.

Buckley suggested addressing the issue with the individual landscaping operations in town might be the first step.

"My employees and I attempt to be observant of nap times, kids coming home off the bus, people out for a walk, etc.," Buckley wrote. "I would gladly address on a case by case basis any concerns or complaints that arise."

Buckley also explained that Sunday is an overflow day for periods of foul weather.

Ramsden said commercial landscapers could shift their accounts. Electric blowers and raking can be used during the restricted hours. He suggested that many homeowners would be willing to pay for an "organic" service.

He pointed out that it takes one of his neighbors 1 hour and 45 minutes to rake his property but would take a crew of three men half his age to use a leaf blower on the same yard. "Interior standards (for cleaning) are now being applied to the outside world," he said.

Selectmen voted 4-0 not to recommend the article. They said the proposal needs more work. Selectmen's recommendations can carry weight at Town Meeting but voters have the final say.

Following the meeting, Ramsden said he was very disappointed in the vote but would press ahead. He said he planned to improve his presentation to Sustainable Cohasset, an environmental group, and to the Advisory Committee next week.

Snowballs crack car's windshield

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police gave a couple of Cohasset boys at "talking to" after it was discovered they were throwing snowballs at cars near the Border Street bridge on Saturday morning (Feb. 23). There may have been more boys involved – one caller put the number at four or five – but police were only able to apprehend two juveniles. Police spoke to the boys and their parents.

One woman reported her windshield was cracked after being hit by a snowball.

The boys are writing letters of apology and will pay restitution if the victim does not handle it through insurance company, Chief James Hussey said.

One of the boys is a Cohasset resident and the other is a former resident.

"There is an obvious fascination with throwing snowballs at a moving target," Hussey said. "The officer talked to the kids and impressed upon them that hitting a car with a snowball can put someone's life in jeopardy if it causes an accident."

Flat tire

Reports of vandalism to a motor vehicle parked behind Papa Gino's last week appear to have been unfounded.

Chief Hussey said an officer took a look and it appears the car hit a curb and got a blow out. The tire did not look as though it had been damaged by a vandal, he said. The call came in last Monday (Feb. 18) at just past 2 a.m.

Pocketbook found

A walk-in to police headquarters turned in a red pocketbook last week (Feb. 18). As it turns out the pocketbook belongs to a Hull resident and was stolen on Feb. 12 in Hingham as part of a rash of purse-snatches in the area, police said.

On Feb. 14, a pink wallet — belonging to the same woman and which had been inside the stolen pocketbook — was recovered. Both the purse and pocketbook were discovered around the 300 block of Jersusalem Road.

Chief Hussey said police are working on the assumption that the same subjects have been responsible for purse thefts in both Hingham and Cohasset.

He again reminded residents to bring their pocketbooks or valuables into a store with them, no matter how quick their errand is or to lock them in the trunk.

Late-night jogger

A report of suspicious activity at about 2:18 a.m. on Tuesday (Feb. 19) turned out to be a jogger who runs regularly every night. Chief Hussey said the jogger was wearing reflective gear and was apparently running at that hour because it was the best time that worked for him.

"We prefer that people jog during daylight hours but realize that is not always possible," he said. Hussey said joggers who run in the dark should wear a reflective vest on their torso or wear a jacket or shirt with reflective striping. Joggers should also run toward traffic when on the street.

Hussey explained that a motorist might not always see a jogger. When running toward oncoming traffic, a jogger can react and jump out of the way if need be.

Walkers on the street should also walk facing traffic, he said.

MV accidents

• At 11:26 a.m. on Tuesday (Feb. 19) a 2002 Jeep traveling north on North Main Street that was owned and operated by a Cohasset resident stopped to make a left onto Sohier Street when it was hit from behind by a 1996 Volvo. The Volvo was also owned and being operated by a Cohasset resident. The Volvo was towed and the operator was cited for following too closely. There were no apparent injuries, police said.

• At 7:44 p.m., also on Tuesday (Feb. 19), a 2002 Jeep that was owned by a Cohasset resident and being operated by a relative was heading south on North Main when as it was coming around a curve, slid on snow and ice and hit a utility pole. National Grid was called to repair the pole, which did snap. The Jeep had to be towed but the driver did not appear to have any injuries, police said.

Napping

Police checked out a woman who was inside a gray Mercedes and was asleep last Tuesday (Feb. 19) at about 3:37 p.m. in the Tedeschi Plaza parking lot. The caller told police there was a baby in the car. An officer did a welfare check and as it turned out the woman was just "resting her eyes" and there was no infant in the car.

Gates issue

Complaints about the functioning of the railroad crossing gates on Pleasant Street resulted in the determination that the arms of the gates were not going all the way up so the lights continued to flash.

Chief Hussey explained the arms stopped just short of going all the way up. The MBTA was on the scene within minutes of being called and made repairs. The incident occurred at 8:15 a.m. on Friday (Feb. 22).

No trespass

A woman who had been involved in a prior shoplifting incident at Stop & Shop returned to the supermarket last week where she was spotted by store personnel who reported her to the police.

Police talked to the woman who had a "no-trespass" order not to return to the store. Apparently she thought it was no longer in effect, police said.

Chamber of Commerce planning Networking Social

Cohasset Chamber of Commerce is planning its first Networking Social of 2008 at the Cohasset Historical Society, 106 South Main St., from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m., on Thursday, March 6. All current members, as well as anyone interested in becoming a Chamber member, are invited to mix and mingle with the energetic and rapidly growing group. Come meet some of the new business owners in town. Light refreshments will be served.

Wrap up winter, warm up spring!

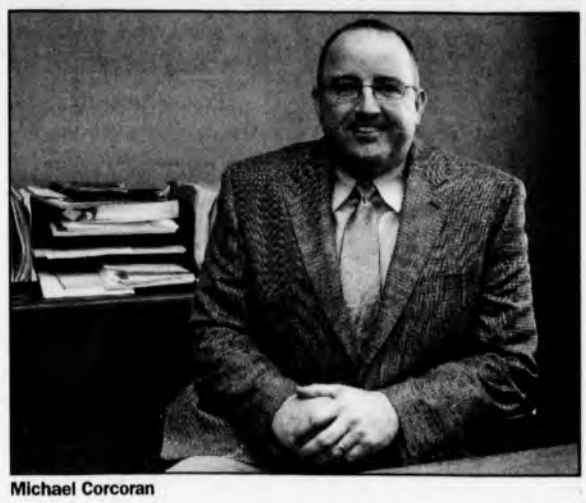
The 15th annual Quilt Show and Luncheon, hosted by Second Congregational Church in Cohasset, means spring is around the corner. For years, South Shore residents have enjoyed the bright colors and personal designs of local artisans as their handcrafted quilts are displayed at the church.

The show, which began as a way to spend a late winter afternoon, has blossomed into a community favorite and a charitable program that raised more than $20,000 for youth programs.

Each year, approximately 60 quilts are displayed during the show featuring unique designs and patterns. Many designs are inspired by personal experiences of the artist, such as the prints from the Hawaii quilt created from memories of a tropical vacation. A bit of history is always on display at the show as well. This year, the Hourglass quilt, made of 10, 418 pieces, will be on loan from Cohasset Historical Society.

"Festivals and Festivities," the church's cookbook, will be on sale for $18.

The Quilt Show and Luncheon will take place from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, March 1, at 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset. For tickets to the show and luncheon, call Second Congregational Church at 781-383-0345 or purchase tickets at the door. Tickets are $12, and proceeds will benefit Boston Medical Center's Spark Center, Children's AIDS program, and the Reach Out and Read program.



Corcoran named advertising director

Michael Corcoran has been named advertising director for GateHouse Media New England's South Unit, publisher of the Cohasset Mariner.

Corcoran was formerly the senior financial analyst in GateHouse Media's Needham office.

"Michael has extensive knowledge of the Marshfield-based operation," Publisher Mark Olivieri said. "After moving to our Needham office, Mike has continued to work with the South Unit on not only day-to-day operations but all major company initiatives and launches pertaining to the South Unit. Having worked directly with Michael since his first day on the job, I can speak first hand to Michael's unmatched passion and knowledge for revenue growth, product strategy and newspaper profitability."

"Michael has extensive knowledge of the Marshfield-based operation."
— Mark Olivieri, publisher

Michael Corcoran

Corcoran's tenure with GHMNE/Community Newspaper Company reaches back to 1999, when he was appointed financial analyst in the South's Marshfield facility. After being assigned to the Needham finance department, Corcoran served many roles in his support of the advertising, circulation, creative and production arms of the company.

Raised in Hingham, Corcoran now resides in Scituate with his wife, Martha, and son, Michael Jr., where he is involved with local youth groups. He is a graduate of Boston College with a master's degree in finance.

"As a life-long resident of the South Shore, I look forward to the opportunity of providing the businesses of our region with the right advertising solutions for their needs," Corcoran said. "I am also very excited to work with a great staff that produces quality products week in and week out."

The South Unit of GateHouse Media New England includes main offices in Plymouth and Raynham, with its headquarters in Marshfield.

Corcoran can be reached by e-mail at mcorcora@cnc.com or by phone at 781-837-4503.

pool in Concord, Mass. as his model, "that's my dream pool," he said. He envisions something similar for the swim center — an eight-lane pool, a separate diving well and a kiddie pool. The Concord pool facility also has a workout room and a heated pool.

John Cavanaro, a local engineering consultant, is performing initial surveying to determine if what Burnett has visualized will physically fit on the land. The report will be finished in March.

"It may or may not fit, I have no idea," said Burnett, "this is the very first step of a long, long process."

More than a pool, the facility would be an asset for the community. The Cohasset-Scituate swim team for practices and meets, as well as other area teams could use it. Right now, the team must go out of town for practices. Also, he foresees whole families being able to use the facility to the fullest extent.

"From the community aspect and building community, that's what I'm really passionate about."
— Bill Burnett, project proponent

"From the community aspect and building community, that's what I'm really passionate about," said Burnett; the facility would be a gathering place for the young and old.

CPC member Susan Sardina, who formerly lived in Concord, loved the idea of the pool, "it becomes a whole bigger thing that just a pool. It facilitates the high school and facilitates a healthy lifestyle."

She suggested Burnett look into other possible sites as well if the swim center site doesn't work out, particularly behind the high school.

When the project begins to gel a little bit more, the Swim Center will be looking to fund the construction form a variety of sources. Community preservation funds could be one of many sources.

CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey said as far as his committee's involvement he worried about two things. First, the price tag of the project and amount of money the swim center proponents would request for the project.

"You have to be reasonable and realistic with what you come to us for," said Ivimey, as the project could ultimately be a multi-million dollar undertaking. Burnett said he knew private fundraising would have to be a main component.

Also, Ivimey said the CPC was not allowed to fund gymnasiums, so where the line crossed from pool to gym would have to be thoroughly discussed.

CPC member Ralph Dormitzer advised Burnett to think ahead to not only getting the project built, but also how it will be properly maintained. Burnett said he was aware of that aspect and would look to the successful model of the Concord pool for guidance.

The primary objectives of the Swim Center has always been to provide an affordable source of recreation for families, which Burnett and the directors of the Swim Center aim to continue even with a new facility.

"Hopefully sometime in my lifetime, we'll see a new pool," said Burnett in a phone interview.

Overflow meeting

Plant upgrades needs to be tested before new connections

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Sewer Commissioners were in the hot seat on Monday night as they heard from an audience of about 25 neighbors and abutters of the Wastewater Treatment Plant.

The meeting follows on the heels of another overflow at the plant on Feb. 13 — the fourth in two years. The meeting covered a lot of ground in the hour and a half of discussion. Communication, townwide "I and I" issues topped discussion and the Little Harbor sewer expansion project.

The abutters pushed for a firm timeline for the new 450 Little Harbor tie-ins and assurances the plant could handle its current flow — without overflow events — before any additional capacity is added.

The issues that lead to the sewer plant overflows are many and complex, but the result is easy to describe: partially treated sewage overflows into the backyards of Elm Street homes and Jacob's Meadow creating a health hazard for pets, kids and adults. Increased flooding over the past few years compounds the overflow issues.

The exchanges between the abutters and the two Sewer Commission members present were at times heated and contentious. But, both sides tried to move toward identifying a plan of action going forward.

The most vocal abutter Joe Coggins of 57 Elm St. expressed his frustration with the committee and the lack of action to fix the overflow issue and its underlying causes.

We're asking you to run a sewer plant that doesn't dump a toilet in my backyard."
— Joe Coggins, 57 Elm St.

His first issue was the lack of notification to the abutters. Notification protocol was established following the Patriots Day overflow in April 2007, but was not followed in the most recent event.

"The first obligation is to take care of the problem (the overflow)," rather than make a phone call notifying the abutters of an overflow event, said Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz. However, it was Coggins' point of view the health of the pets, kids and adults of the neighborhood should be of paramount concern.

"Shouldn't you be concerned with the health of the neighbors of your sewer plant?" said Coggins, offering as an example of his dog being let out into his backyard, which unbeknownst to him is flooded with untreated and minimally treated sewage. When the dog comes back into the house, Coggins doesn't know what's on his paws or on his fur.

"No one is asking the Sewer Commission to tear down the plant. We're asking you to run a sewer plant that doesn't dump a toilet in my backyard," said Coggins later in the meeting.

Dick Nye of Veolia, the town's wastewater treatment plant operator, said he knew an overflow was imminent after the heavy rains in the morning and early afternoon hours. Sewer Commissioner Sean Cunning asked that the operators notify him or another sewer commissioner when they believe an overflow is imminent so they can begin to notify the abutters.

"We could do a better job, we will do a better job on the communication side," said Cunning. Coggins and other abutters also asked to be kept abreast of the plant upgrades underway in conjunction with the Little Harbor sewer expansion project— updates they say they have asked for and not received.

"We have been asking all along because it is impactful," said Coggins.

The upgrade has two components. An "extreme flow pipe" that will disinfect the water through a UV chamber and reroute a portion of effluent to the harbor in extreme flow instances typical during heavy rainfall. The pipe is expected to be up and running within six weeks. But, the abutters have concerns about the extreme flow pipe would only move the problem to the harbor instead of solving it.

The second component is the installation of new and additional membranes designed to handle the additional capacity of the Little Harbor homes. Fall 2008 is the expected completion time of the plant upgrade.

Cathy Witkos of 69 Elm St. said the lack of regular communication and follow-through on the behalf of the commission has led to mistrust, "it's beyond not right."

"We agree we are probably guilty of a misrepresentation to abutters," said Kasperowicz. But, this admission didn't satisfy, "we know you're guilty," said Coggins, "what bothers me is the Sewer Commission, the engineers and operators won't stand up and admit this isn't working."

Beyond notification and increased communication, there was plenty of discussion on what is causing the overflows. The primary culprit, it seemed all agreed, is influx and infiltration, or "I and I," issues throughout the town. "I and I" is the term used to describe the ways groundwater and stormwater enter a sewer system. Inflow is water that is dumped into the sewer system through improper connections, such as downspouts and groundwater sump pumps. Infiltration is groundwater that enters the sewer system through leaks in the pipe. Illegal sump pumps could also be contributing to the influx of water to the plant during wet weather.

While there is no way to completely eliminate "I and I" issues in town, the abutters and the Sewer Commission agreed steps should be taken to address the largest culprits.

As a way to quantify the effect of "I and I" on the system, plant operator Nye explained on an average day the plant processes an average of 250,000 gallons of wastewater everyday, but when there is an overflow it jumps to 1.7 million gallons.

Town Meeting authorized the borrowing of $1 million to address town-wide "I and I" issues. Coughlin Environmental Services have collecting flow data and inspecting manholes to try to get a handle on where the "I and I" problems exist. They have almost a year's worth of data and are in the process of compiling the data, analyzing and putting together an interim report, said principal engineer at Coughlin Environmental Services, Dan Coughlin.

In the spring they will begin testing the pipes, starting with those closest to the plant, for leaks. But, the issue could be beyond the main sewer lines into the service connections (between the main line and the home) for which the Sewer Commission will need to get permission to access, inspect and fix.

Homes around Jacob's Meadow because of the severe flooding issues will be the first to be targeted, said Coughlin in a phone interview. The pumping station at Smith Place has also been identified as a potential place where "I and I" issues can be easily addressed, said Coughlin.

Approximately $100,000 of the $1 million has been used thus far.

Little Harbor sewer expansion

With over 450 homes and 150,000 gallons per days scheduled to come into the Wastewater Treatment Plant within the next few years, the abutters are extremely concerned the increased flow even with the expansion would make their issues even worse.

The abutters called for a defined period for additional tie-ins — nd a substantial testing period between the completion of the expansion and the new sewer hook-ups.

"We need a commitment to how much time will be given to make sure the (upgraded) plant is working," said Witkos, offering at least a year as an ideal period. But, the Sewer Commission and Coughlin seemed hesitant to agree to a firm year before tie-ins. Kasperowicz said the expanded plant would need wet weather event to test it to make sure the plant does not overflow.

The Town of Cohasset is under a state mandate to have the 485 Little Harbor homes hooked up to town sewer by 2012.

"If it does overflow [after the plant upgrade] then we've got a huge problem," said Cunning. Alternative options if the plant cannot handle the increased capacity of the Little Harbor homes were vague. The Hull wastewater treatment plant has available capacity, but it would come with a hefty price tag.

"If we are not comfortable with how the plant is operating, Little Harbor won't be hooked up," said Kasperowicz, "I can't imagine (the state) wouldn't give us an extension. There are tensions all over, but I think in the end right has to prevail...we have to solve the immediate problem before addressing the longer view problem," he said.

If the Sewer Commission was able to negotiate an intermunicipal agreement for additional sewer capacity, there are engineering challenges involved. The matter is not simply turning a valve to send the effluent to Hull, said Coughlin. Additional pressure and an expanded pumping station could be required to put the additional homes onto the Hull system.

The abutters were clear options have to be explored and the necessity of concrete objectives for the upgraded plant established.

"There needs to be a threshold of success," said Coggins, asking the Sewer Commission to define what the results have to be to prove to the abutters, the town and themselves that the problem is solved.

The abutters pushed for something in writing to implicitly define the parameters of success and a firmer timeline for the Little Harbor tie-ins to ensure their concerns are addressed even after the current committee has changed personnel.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

WITH A SMILE

Hello Cohasset, hope you are having a great end of February and getting ready to greet March 1 with a smile! I am writing about an event for this evening as well as one for tomorrow to help pass the time as we look ahead to Spring. Enjoy.

NEW ARRIVAL

Oliver Daniel Lemon was born to Lisa Bull and Rob Lemon on Friday morning, Feb. 22, 2008, at New York Presbyterian Hospital, New York City. The family resides in Glen Ridge, New Jersey. Elated grandparents include Rev. Jan Carlsson-Bull, minister of First Parish Unitarian Universalist in Cohasset, and Daniel Bull, of Scituate, and Mary and David Lemon of Komoka, Ontario, Canada.

BU HONORS

Two Cohasset residents have recently been named to the dean's list at Boston University for the Fall semester. Congratulations to Chelsea Grossman and Caroline Steele for achieving this honor.

COURTESY PHOTO

The Narrator and Joseph, Ann McCoy of Hingham and Mike Nakashima of Cohasset, take a break from rehearsing "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" for the Cohasset Dramatic Club's run of the show which opens tonight at Town Hall. Call 617-697-2115 for tickets.

'JOSEPH' PREMIERS

Get ready to come and enjoy a colorful and musical story of Joseph and his coat of many colors as told through the musical score and lyrics of Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber presented by the Cohasset Dramatic Club. The dates for this show are Feb 29, March 1,7,8,14 and 15 at 7:30 pm and March 2, 9 and 16 at 2 pm and the show is held at the Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium. Tickets are $14, $12 groups of 8 or more and may be purchased in advance at Buttonwood Books, Front Street Books in Scituate, or Paperscapes, or by calling 617-697-2115. Ticket also available at the door.

This is such a great way to enjoy an evening with friends and/or family members with music, color and fun. See you there!

NETWORKING

Come attend the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce networking event, March 6 from 5:30 – 7:30 p.m. Members and non-members welcome. The Chamber has many exciting new initiatives underway, come hear about its plans as you enjoy the beautiful ambiance of the Paul Pratt Building. The Pratt Building is our local treasure; it is the Cohasset Historical Society headquarters (106 South Main St.) and features artwork, period furniture and artifacts of the Cohasset area. Please join us for this congenial evening and bring a colleague.

POST PROM

The next Post Prom planning meeting is scheduled for Monday, March 3 at 7 p.m. in the Deer Hill library. All interested in theme, decorating, entertainment and food are encouraged to come! For questions or more information, please contact annfkelly@aol.com or babettestrecker@gmail.com.

U HARTFORD

The University of Hartford is pleased to announce its dean's list for Fall 2007. Thomas E. Morgan of Cohasset achieved this honor, nice job!

TASTE OF VENICE

The Barn at the Red Lion Inn will be transformed into a Venetian Carnivale setting for the South Shore Art Center's annual winter fundraising gala. The event will take place tonight (Friday, Feb. 29) at 6:30 p.m. and will feature a seated dinner, live music and entertainment, and spectacular live and silent auctions.

Boston's Billy Costa will be the master of ceremonies. Auction items include sports memorabilia, luxury travel packages, event tickets, and many works of art by highly-regarded regional artists such as Sergio Roffo, Richard Loud, Anne Heywood, Irma Cerese, JoAnne Chittick, Cindy Vallino, Jane Flavell Collins, Frank Strazzulla, and Nancy Colella. For reservations to Venetian Carnivale contact the South Shore Art Center at 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org. Tickets are $125 for Art Center members, $145 for non-members. All proceeds support the exhibitions and education programs of the South Shore Art Center.

QUILT SHOW

Spring begins in Cohasset with the Quilt Show at Second Congregational Church. No matter what the weather outside, the interior brings an unbelievable array of color as more than 50 quilts are on display in the sanctuary. The color continues in the church hall as tables are set with white tablecloths and flower centerpieces, and red aproned waiters await your selection from a delightful menu. This 15th annual Quilt Show and Luncheon will take place on March 1 from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.. Tickets are available at Second Congregational Church (781-383-0345) and are$12 for the entire event. It is a good idea to buy them ahead as seating is limited.

DERBY HONORS

Derby Academy Head of School Andrea Archer recently acknowledged qualifying seventh- and eighth-grade students who achieved academic First or Second Honors for the fall semester.

Those students awarded First Honors earned an A- (90) or better average in all academic subjects.

From Cohasset they are: Katherine Brown (8th Grade); Doyle Calhoun (8th Grade); Riley Calhoun (8th Grade); Myles Garbarini (7th Grade); and Robin Spofford (7th Grade).

Those students awarded Second Honors earned a B (84) or better average in all academic subjects.

From Cohasset they are: Derick Buffum (8th Grade); Sarah Evans (8th Grade); Deven Koswick (8th Grade); Emily O'Brien (8th Grade); and Hannah Rawson (8th Grade).

Congratulations all!

That is all for this week of news. Send in your photos, information and newsbits no later than Tuesdays by 5.

Decals to raise money for memorial fund

Remembering SHS athlete, Tim Mahoney

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Fire Department has found a way to remember Tim Mahoney while raising money for a memorial fund set up by the late teenager's family.

"We thought it would be a nice tribute to Tim," said Cohasset Capt. James Runey, about the blue and white decals that feature the No. 9, which was Tim's jersey number for both the hockey and lacrosse teams at Scituate High where he was a sophomore.

The decals, which sell for $5 each, are available at the Cohasset Fire Headquarters on Elm Street or by calling 781-383-6116 and at Scituate High where two students are selling them, Runey said.

"Every dollar we take in will go to the Timothy J. Mahoney Memorial Fund which has been set up at Scituate Federal Savings Bank," Runey said.

Tim, 16, was killed in a single-car accident Feb. 2 on Route 3A between Mendel Road and Pond Street. The driver, Chris Barrow, 18, and a senior at Scituate High, remains hospitalized.

The decals are available for $5 each at the fire department on Elm Street.

"Tim was from a well loved and respected family and he was great kid.:
— Capt. James Runey, Cohasset Fire Department

Runey, who is in charge of Group 3 at the fire department, said his Group came up with the idea. Tim's father Capt. Frank Mahoney is in charge of Group 1.

"Group 3 came up with the idea, but everyone is involved," Runey said.

David Hassan Sign Company of Cohasset donated the first 500 decals. The firefighters' union, Cohasset Permanent Firefighters Local 2804, will pick up the cost of any decals over the 500.

Runey said the decals could be put on a hockey or lacrosse helmet or on a window.

"I have never seen such an outpouring like I did with this particular funeral," Runey said about Tim's services. "Tim was from a well loved and respected family and he was a great kid.

"Tim will be remembered for a long time."

Runey said how the memorial fund will be used will be up to the Mahoney family.

The Timothy J. Mahoney Memorial Fund has been set up at Scituate Federal Savings Bank, 72 Front St., Scituate, MA 02066.

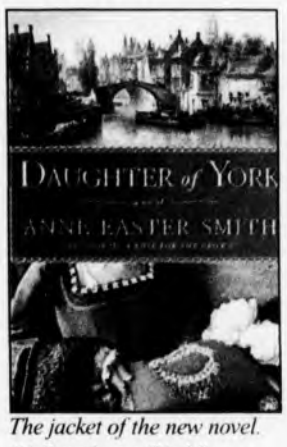
From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

The Cohasset Historical Society is grateful to those who remember us with donations of Cohasset photographs, textiles and memorabilia. We would like to take this occasion to thank you for your continued generous support.

If you have enjoyed reading our columns and discovering some of what we hold in our archives, please consider supporting the Historical Society. Your tax-deductible donation can be sent to: Cohasset Historical Society, PO Box 627, Cohasset, MA 02025. All donations are gratefully appreciated.

If you have something that you would consider donating to our archives please give us a call at 781-383-1434.

From the Archives is a weekly feature provided by Cohasset Historical Society.



Judith McNeil recently donated this wonderful photograph to the Society. Her mother is among the "dolls" but we don't know much more about the photograph. Can anyone help us? We believe it was taken in the 1920s. Perhaps you can recognize yourself in the picture or perhaps the gentleman. A close examination of the photo shows that each child is dressed as a different doll. Please give us a call at 781-383-1434 if you can shed some light on the children in the photo or occasion on which it was taken.

Afternoon tea with author March 9

Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, Route 3A, will host an afternoon tea for author Anne Easter Smith at 2 p.m., on Sunday, March 9. Smith will be discussing "A Daughter of York," her book of historical fiction about Princess Margaret, a 15th century noble and sister to two kings, King Edward IV and Richard the III.

Life at court, either medieval or 20th century, is rich with detail and intrigue. People are fascinated by the details of fashion, food, ceremony and behavior. Smith's research allows her to recreate Margaret's life and successfully imagine characters who would have been among Margaret's confidantes. Smith grew up in England, Germany and Egypt. At age 24 she moved to the United States. Thirty years later, she is still in the U.S., but her love for English history remains. Her first book was "A Rose for the Crown," her fictionalized story about Richard III. Smith is a member of the Richard III Society and the Historical Novels Society. She currently lives in Newburyport.

This is a free event. Reservations are requested, and can be made by calling Buttonwood at 781-383-2665.

The jacket of the new novel. "A Daughter of York."

Entries sought for edible art exhibit

Cohasset High School is seeking entries for its seventh annual edible art exhibit, to be held beginning at 6 p.m., Thursday, March 6. The edible art competition is open to people 4 through 104. The artwork must be edible, meaning it must be safe for human consumption. It can be created by individuals or by a collaborative group. Artists will be responsible for setting up their pieces for viewing.

There will be two categories for judging: original artwork and copies of artwork. There will be many prizes, which will be provided by local restaurants and merchants. After all prizes are awarded, all work becomes property of the party, where attendees will eat and enjoy the art. The admission fee will be $2.

For information or to register, call Nina Berkowitz at Cohasset High School at 781-383-6100 or email nberkowitz@Cohassetk12.org.

Youth Ministry to host family event

A special evening, sponsored by the St. Anthony and St. Paul Youth Ministry, will take place Saturday, March 1. There will be a presentation and reflection by the Youth Ministry group on last summer's trip to New Orleans and the upcoming trip to Louisville, Ken. See what the youth of both parishes are doing for those less fortunate.

This is sure to be an uplifting and fun event, so gather family and friends to attend. There will be food, silent auction and raffles.

For tickets and information, contact Bette Baker at 781-383-7310 or betbaker@Comcast.net; Lindsey Watson at 781-749-7310, boomerw@comcast.net; or youth minister Bill Mezzetti at 781-589-0911, billmezzetti @yahoo.com.

South Shore Conservatory to host Drama Open House

South Shore Conservatory invites children ages 4 and older to come and discover the creative person within themselves at a Drama Open House from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m., on Saturday, March 1. Children will participate in creative, dramatic games that are fun for all ages, and encourage them to use their imagination and speaking voice.

Drama department chairwoman Ellen Kelly hopes the participants have fun and learn how to feel at ease in front of an audience. "I hope they all bring their imagination with them," she said.

South Shore Conservatory is at 1 Conservatory Dr., Hingham. For more information, visit the Web site at southshoreconservatory.org or call 781-749-7565, ext. 34.

68 Summer Street Cohasset

Great family house located in Cohasset village. This circa 1824 fisherman's house is walking distance to the waterfront and village stores and restaurants. Without a doubt one of the best locations in town with large secluded backyard bordering a beautiful marsh that creates awesome sunsets.

The house was completely gutted and rebuilt in 1996. All new heating, A/C, plumbing, central vacuum, electrical, walls, floors, windows and lighting. The kitchen was completely re-done in 2006. The garage was 100% rebuilt and a new bonus family room added above. $875,000 By Appointment Only.

Trio teams up for cancer patients

By Brian P. Nanos
BNANOS@CNC.COM

Three Scituate women are working with a Cohasset business to provide what they hope is more personal help to women and families suffering cancer.

On March 8, Learn Live Love, a charity run by Scituate residents Pam Ahl, Rosemary Lonborg and Amy Webber, is teaming up with Cohasset's Adrian Morris Salon to hold a full day of fundraising to help cancer patients.

The day will begin with the salon's Cut-A-Thon, which will include a guest makeup artist. That night, revelers will gather at the River Club in Scituate for a night of dinner, drinks and dancing. Last year, similar events raised $32,000.

The money will go to the women's Scituate-based charity that helps women and families who have been affected by cancer by providing basic services such as babysitters, wigs and help paying the mortgage.

"Science is great and all the big charities are necessary, but sometimes we forget that just getting sick can be expensive," Ahl said of the group's philosophy.

The charity was formed in late 2005 after Ahl herself was diagnosed with cancer and received a first-hand education on just how helpful community support can be. According to Ahl, she had decided to get through the treatments herself without asking her friends for help.

"We're women; that's what we do," she said. "We survive. We multitask. We take care of other people."

But her friends, especially Lonborg, would hear none of it. The formed a tight-knit community that helped Ahl with the everyday reality of adding cancer treatment and care to her already full schedule. Ahl describes the outpouring of support as "humbling."

"I had received an outpouring of support and so many people came forward to help me in so many ways," she said.

"Oh my gosh. It's humbling that people continue to want to help on behalf of other people."
Pam Ahl

"I said, 'You know everybody should have this.'"

And so Lonborg and Ahl decided, in Lonborg's words, "to get something positive out of something very sad."

They teamed up with Webber, a coworker from St. Mary's Parish Center who had lost her husband to cancer to hold an information expo. Then Adrian Morris, Lonborg's hairdresser, who had already held his own cancer fundraisers, started to raise money for Learn Live Love,

"All of a sudden we had all this money," Webber said.

Together, they have raised $80,00 in three years. The money has gone to help families throughout the South Shore.

And as she was when her friends first began showing up to help her through treatments, Ahl is still taken aback by the generosity.

"Oh my gosh," she said. "It's humbling that people continue to want to help on behalf of other people."

others were looking for an artistic outlet and some just wanted to reignite a former passion for art. But, nearly all readily admit the challenging nature of the art form.

The extremely technical form of art is meant to capture nature as the artist sees it, balancing the artistic elements and portraying the plant as it exists in nature, says Roche.

"Art and science share an almost symbiotic relationship. A botanical illustrator must actually be an artist with one foot planted firmly in science," says Roche. "If you can produce a drawing or painting that, besides accurate is also beautiful, you may have created a work of art, but not all illustration is art, some may show every tiny detail, but still be dry and dull."

The beginning of each project begins with the examination of the plant specimen. The class is currently examining and producing watercolor paintings of the primrose. In front of each student is a small potted plant to serve as her muse. Each primrose is unique in its shapes, texture, color and size, which must be brought out in each artist's work. They study it. They turn it. They draw it. They match nature's colors to watercolors.

"You have to imagine you are the first person painting a plant, so it's important to be really accurate," says Roche, a South Shore Art Center gallery artist. She has taught the botanical art class for 10 years at the Art Center, but has taught adults the craft of botanical art for 23 years. Roche is the founding director of the New England Society of Botanical Artists, which is affiliated with the larger American Society of Botanical Artists.

"It's about recording and learning about the world."
— Sarah Roche, botanical artist

Many of the students who have taken the class for several years have joined the New England Society of Botanical Artists.

The laid back yet focused class covers the basics from accurately sketching the plant, to mixing watercolors to truly represent real life specimen to precisely re-creating a two-dimensional painting of a three-dimensional object.

"It's about recording and learning about the world," says Roche.

One of the artists in the class, Claire Watts of Cohasset has been taking the class almost since Roche started teaching it. She said she has always loved to draw and paint, but with a full-time job it was often difficult to make that happen, "this class is the discipline to make that happen," says Watts.

The class has all skill levels. When Anne Morrison started taking the class in 2001, she says she was a true beginner but she has gained the love and skill involved with the art form.

"With this class no matter how many times you take it, you just never graduate. I learn something new every class," says Morrison, adding "this is an art form everyone can learn."

But, it does not come without its challenges. Beginners often struggle with the focused, detailed work botanical art involves and encounter the innate problems of working with a living thing.

STAFF PHOTOS/DAVE NEAULT

Muriel Long of Hull revels in the detailed work the botanical art form involves.

Muriel Long, a third year student from Hull, bought a wine-colored lady slipper orchid a few weeks ago when the blossom had yet to open. She began her work with the leaves, banking on the flower opening by the time she was ready to begin painting the top half of the flower. But she had no such luck, the stubborn orchid stayed shut.

She called the flower shop where she had purchased the plant to ask what she could do to help the plant along, but they couldn't help her. Eventually, she bought a similarly colored orchid to finish her painting. Then, in order to create an accurate portrayal of the plant Long has to adjust the coloring and pattern of the leaves to more closely reflect the second plant.

"We can't have things too easy, then what would be the fun of it?" says Long with a smile.

Long revels in the detailed work the botanical art form involves. Self-described as an anal person, she dons magnification glasses to more closely examine both the plant and her watercolor painting.

"The first day I attended a class it was like I was a dry sponge dumped in a bucket of water," said Long, "it's been a great experience."

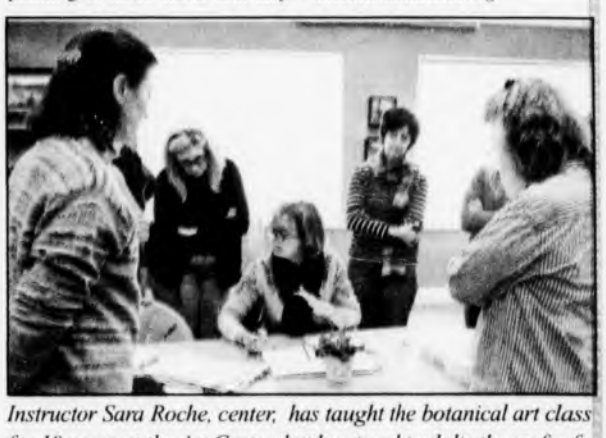
Whereas typical watercolor painting is more loose and airy, the botanical art is detailed and exact — a process right up Long's alley. Others struggle with the exacting process involved in botanical art, but veterans encourage the new artists in the program to keep with it.

Once an artist gets beyond the initial struggles of getting the painting just right, Morrison and others agree the process can become a relaxing one.

"It's a zen thing," says Morrison, where sometimes two or three hours can go by before she realizes it.

Kathy Folino of Rockland took up botanical art two years ago and hasn't looked back since, "it's an incredible way to help you see the beauty of nature," she says. She is currently pursuing her botanical art certificate at Wellesley College also taught by Roche.

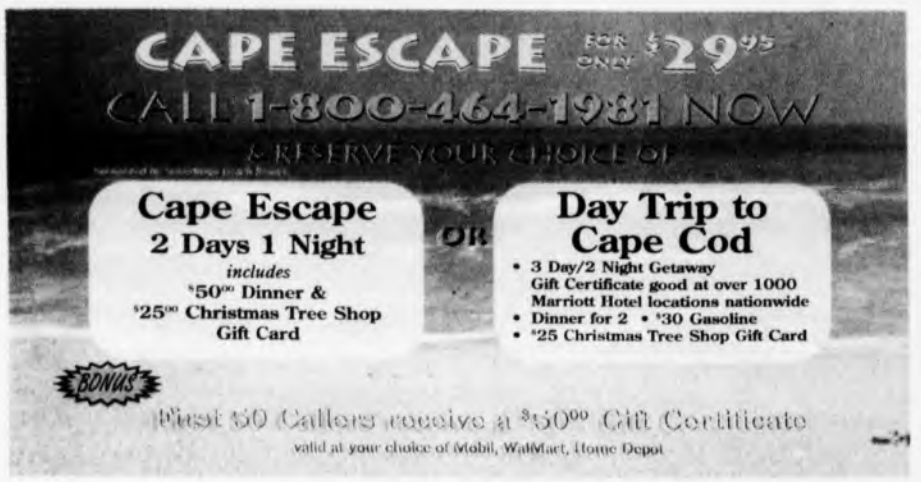
Through the art class, Folino says she has learned a lot more about plants and nature than she ever intended to know. After doing initial sketches she researches the plant to gain a greater understanding of it.



Each artist brings his or her own eye and perspective to the 'seeing' part of the process.

"I just paint what I see, that's what it's about — painting what you see," says Roche.

To find out more about botanical art, visit www.ssac.org or www.nesbaartists.org.



"It's a zen thing," says Anne Morrison, where sometimes two or three hours can go by before she realizes it.

Instructor Sara Roche, center, has taught the botanical art class for 10 years at the Art Center, but has taught adults the craft of botanical art for 23 years.

Kicking back in tiny, low-key Nevis

Rick Holmes
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Nevis, West Indies -

Some travelers collect states. Some collect countries, taking great pride in the stamps on their passports. Others collect cities, theaters and fine restaurants. They can compare notes till closing time.

Then, there are the travelers who collect islands. They store memories of sandy Pacific atolls, of rustic inns off the coast of Maine, of all-inclusives in the Caribbean, of white Greek villages surrounded by the blue Aegean Sea. They are veterans of cruises, connoisseurs of beaches. They know that every island is a gem of a different hue, a unique cut.

So where does Nevis fit in their jewel box?

Put it in a small compartment, because it's a tiny gem of a destination. And store it with your cherished antique pieces, because Nevis feels like it's from another time, a time before the Caribbean became Disneyfied and Americanized.

How small? Nevis is oval shaped, roughly 6 miles wide and 7 deep. It's got one small town, the capital, Charlestown, one majestic mountain, Nevis Peak, and one main road.

Nevis is the junior member of the Federation of St. Kitts and Nevis, two of the Leeward Islands, about 200 miles east of Puerto Rico. Nevis has a population of 11,000, which, combined with the population of St. Kitts, makes for a country smaller than some New England towns.

Nevis serves up views including of neighboring islands.

Wherever you are on Nevis, you can turn one direction and see Nevis Peak, with clouds dancing around its point. The clouds reminded Christopher Columbus of snow - Nieves in Spanish - which became the name Nevis (pronounced Nee-vis) after it was made a British colony.

Look the other direction and you can see the sea, the horizon decorated with other islands, including St. Kitts, Monserrat and Antigua, depending on which direction you are facing.

In the island's heyday, sugar plantations stretched from the sea almost to the top of Nevis Peak, but that heyday passed more than a century ago. Now, the top half of the mountain has been taken over by rainforest, and the largest plantations have been turned into resorts.

The plantations have an Old World charm to them, as do much of the buildings on the island. Charlestown's buildings date back to the 1700s, and nothing looks especially new.

Nevis has hosted famous visitors for centuries - from Lord Nelson to Princess Di to Oprah - but it still has an undiscovered feel to it.

That is partly by design. The airport can't handle large jets and the harbor can't handle large cruise ships, limits that keep the island from feeling overwhelmed by tourists. I spotted no T-shirt shops in Charlestown and souvenirs are hard to find. Nor will you find Starbucks, Gucci or any other recognizable brand - foreign-owned store chains are prohibited. In fact, if shopping is your favorite vacation activity, you had best pick another island.

There is one name-brand resort, the classy Four Seasons. And many go there to golf and dine in high style.

For sunseekers, Nevis' calling card is its crystal waters and uncrowded beaches. It is not a noisy beach scene, but you can rent kayaks, windsurf or fish. For $55, you can spend a terrific afternoon on a catamaran, sipping rum punch and snorkeling over coral reefs teeming with colorful, exotic fish.

On land, activities include golf, horseback riding and hiking in the rainforest. The hikes can be strenuous, especially if you intend to climb Nevis Peak, and a guide is recommended. The Nevisians (rhymes with Parisians) haven't done much to take advantage of this natural wonder - parking lots at the end of marked trails would be a start - but at least you don't have to worry about crowded trails.

The island's cultural attractions are few and unremarkable. There is a botanical garden, a preserved historic sugar plantation, a small museum dedicated to American patriot Alexander Hamilton, who spent his childhood on Nevis. There is no movie theater and no casino, though both can be found on St. Kitts, with regular ferries connecting the islands (the trip takes about 45 minutes).

The relative lack of 24/7 entertainment points to what Nevis really offers: a relaxed, uncluttered pace at which to enjoy the finer things of life.

You can spend an entire afternoon eating, drinking and making friends at Sunshine's, a beachside bar famous for its "Killer Bee" rum drinks and nobody will think you're wasting time. You can loll away the day at the Golden Rock Plantation Inn, waiting for afternoon tea time, when resident monkeys join guests for a snack. You can settle into a Nevisian rhythm that finds more than enough entertainment in tropical sun, soft breezes and fresh seafood off the grill.

And you'll have an undiscovered gem of an island to add to your collection.

IF YOU go...

Staying there: Nevis offers a range of accommodations, in terms of price and altitude - how far up onto the mountain (and away from the beach) you are willing to go? A sampling:

* The Four Seasons Resort Nevis (www.fourseasons.-com/nevis/) is at sea level, on Oualie Beach. By far the biggest resort on the island, it boasts an 18-hole golf course, luxury villas as well as luxury rooms, and five-star amenities, with rooms starting at $700 a night.

* The Oualie Beach Resort (www.oualiebeach.com) is at the end of the island's most popular beach, and offers spacious suites in Victorian cottages. A short walk from the Four Seasons, its rooms start at $270.

* At the other end of the altitude scale is the Golden Rock Plantation Inn (www.goldenrock.com). An exquisitely renovated sugar plantation, it sits halfway up Nevis Peak on the edge of the rainforest. The wildlife, ocean views and pastel cottages draw artists and nature lovers. The inn's proprietors also operate a restaurant on the beach, with frequent shuttles between the two. Rooms start at $135.

* The Banyan Tree Bed and Breakfast (www.banyantree-bandb.com/), just down the hill from the Golden Rock, sits among bamboo groves and a 300-year-old banyan tree. Run by a couple from New Hampshire, it caters to travelers who want to get away from it all: no phones, no AC and no TV - but it does have WiFi. The b&b has just three suites, going for $135 to $185.

* A range of guesthouses offers a more affordable stay, often in locations with less convenient access to the beach or the mountain. JPs Guest House (www.nevis-hotels.travel-/JPs_Guest_House), in the heart of Charlestown, offers a chance to get closer to Nevisian culture. It is within walking distance of the beach and the ferry, so you can save on car rentals. It's comfortable, not luxurious, for $72 a night.

Getting around: If you're staying more than a few days, renting a car makes the most sense, but you will have to learn to drive on the left on the narrow island streets. You will also have to pay $24 for a Nevis driver's license in addition to rental car fees (a valid driver's license from home is needed; no test required).

Getting there: American Airlines (www.aa.com) offers connecting service to Nevis via San Juan on a daily basis.

EDC launches 3-year plan

Less than a month after obtaining the approval and the green light from the Board of Selectmen, the Economic Development Committee is ready to embark on the ambitious mission to bring more vitality and revenues to Cohasset outlined below:

EDC Mission:

• To foster and promote ideas, opportunities and events that will cultivate sustainable solutions for the economic well being of the town.

• To capitalize on Cohasset's unique assets, such as its beautiful coast line and its art tradition, to attract those desirable businesses and visitors that will enhance the quaint atmosphere of the town.

• To be committed to establishing lasting economic viability and success for Cohasset retail and commercial businesses, as well as facilitate new investment and capital expansion to increase employment, create new revenue sources and broaden the tax base.

• To interact with the various media and business entities for the purpose of promoting the town's image, strengths and best economic interests.

EDC Proposed 3 year Action Plan (what, why, how & when) :

(Articulated around each paragraph of the mission statement)

In each of the following initiative/Action step, where there is an existing organization involved, the EDC shall be sensitive to that organization's history and leadership, focusing its efforts on a supportive role.

1. Foster and promote ideas, opportunities and events…

Initiatives/Action steps:

a. Organize annual "Cohasset Day" for locals and visitors in the village. No car traffic on S. Main between the Red Lion and Sotheby's. BBQs on the street. Shops displays on sidewalks. Pets parade. Automobile Concours d'Elegance. Auction. Games for kids and adults on the Commons. Presence of personalities (if possible actor/actress who starred in movie showcasing Cohasset). Regional media, including TV, invited. (time frame: 08)

b. Develop the dimension of the Farmers Market to make it a bigger and more vibrant market. Solicit/invite more vendors/booths.

c. Add Cohasset directional signs in strategic places: on 3A, on 228, off route 3, etc. to demonstrate that indeed Cohasset welcomes visitors. Today, the famous phrase "if you don't know where it is, you should not be there in the first place" seems to be the rule of the land. It is not the best way to market the "visitor-friendly" message.

d. Work with all Cohasset events organizers (Art Festival, Music Circus, Triathlon…) in order to create more synergy/impact and standardize the permit delivery process on behalf of the town. Next year, the BOS might want to look into forming a "Special Events Committee" or a sub-committee attached to the EDC.

e. Explore possibility of a regular shuttle between the train station and the village in order to incite visitors to come to Cohasset.

f. Sell day/weekend passes to the beach to only those visitors staying in a Cohasset hotel. Short of doing this, it is somewhat deceiving to attract visitors when they cannot fully enjoy one of the main reasons they wish to come.

g. Consider adding "By-the-sea" to "Cohasset" as a marketing theme. This would create a great opportunity to talk about the town, its natural attributes, and make it easier to promote Cohasset to those visitors who do not know where it is.

2. Capitalize on Cohasset unique assets, such as its beautiful coast line and its art tradition…

Initiatives/Action steps:

a. Encourage new art galleries and stores specializing in high end sea-related merchandise to open in the village. Organize a marketing campaign (mailings/articles in specialized magazines/calls to associations and societies to target key people and galleries and "sell them" on the Cohasset opportunity.

b. Create stronger identity, sophisticated image and town pride by developing and selling through local stores trademarked (revenue opportunity) Cohasset brand on Cohasset t-shirts, sweat shirts, caps, maps, etc.

c. Solicit and support the movie industry's interest in making appropriate movies in Cohasset –especially ones whose themes are consistent with the town's key assets.

d. Make Cohasset cleaner and more inviting. It is particularly critical to clean or re-finish the basin/fountain in the Commons since it represents the image of the town and is a focal point. Perhaps a "fun activity morning" can be organized twice-a-year to get willing residents and concerned shop/business operators to help.

e. Work with the Cohasset Historical Society and the Community Preservation Committee to devise one new perennial event in the summer that will draw significant attendance –such as a day devoted to smaller historic ships that would visit Cohasset Harbor.

f. Provide information/photos of the Cohasset sea shore, harbor, village, etc. to editors of travel guides and other tourism vehicles to promote the beautiful assets of the town to nature and art lovers.

g. Following the first successes (new stores), encourage high-end well known restaurants to take advantage of the town momentum and new development vision to open in town…while it is still possible.

3. Establish lasting viability and success for Cohasset retail and commercial businesses…

Initiatives/Action steps:

a. Serve as an ombudsman for existing businesses and new businesses interested in coming to Cohasset and organize with the owners/operators a regular forum to brainstorm about ideas to increase activity (ex: a Buy-Cohasset discount for residents – double during off-peak times) and provide whatever expertise we can to help them grow their business.

b. Investigate whether the harbor's' income and expenses should be breakeven if they are not presently and promote the idea they should be positive. Evaluate the implementation of elastic moorings to expand moorings and increase revenues. Meet with the Harbormaster and others knowledgeable with this device to explore feasibility.

c. Support the Water Commission in exploring options of selling off additional excess potable water capacity without impacting the long term Cohasset needs to reduce residents water rates.

d. Explore opportunities for immediate expansion of sewer capacity for commercial development in the town.

e. Identify, support and promote Route 3A and Village District property owners that want to build or renovate under-utilized or undeveloped properties. Send out a mailer explaining how the new zoning changes can benefit them.

f. Work closely with the Planning Board to identify space opportunities for new businesses and parking. Support the increase in municipal parking through development of Parcel 2. Support the implementation of visitor/customer-friendly parking regulations that would include employee parking.

4. Interact with the various media and business entities to promote the town…

Initiatives/Action steps:

a. Create and use an interactive EDC public website, linked to the town site, to connect with residents, local businesses, potential new businesses (stores, restaurants, services), investors, developers, visitors, etc. and provide information and assistance. Online menu and agenda of all annual Cohasset events. Online Q & A. Home page illustrated with town logo and photos or graphic references to coast line/village/harbor/art/music. The site would feature both the town's vision and the EDC mission.

b. Create a list of "Reasons to live and/or visit Cohasset" associated with a brief historical background and illustrations to publish on the site and in the media.

c. Establish a partnership with local newspapers, i.e. the Mariner and the Tiny Gazette, to carry our message to the residents, announce upcoming events, report on ideas to explore and, most importantly, keep the dialogue open with all residents to seek their opinion and suggestions, earn their trust and support for our marketing strategy. Work with the Mariner to develop a "Business of the month" promotion with the goal of evolving it into an annual function that would utilize local restaurants.

d. Create a list of types of businesses and stores which ideally fit/identify with the vision of the town development in order to prioritize the marketing actions.

e. Promote and support the town's Alternative Energy Committee in the adoption of a "Wind energy strategy" to reduce the town long term energy costs that will result in direct savings to the taxpayers.

f. Publish brochures of Cohasset "yesterday, today and tomorrow" and distribute in strategic locations: boat shuttles in Boston & Hingham, travel agencies, hotels, chambers of commerce, etc.

Economic Development Committee:Members: Peter Brown, Chairman; Tim Chamberlain, Charles Hurd, Michael Milanoski, Timothy O'Brien, and Alain Pinel. Ex-Officio Members: Planning Board: Michael Westcott-Planning; Board TBD – Sewer Commission. Board of Selectmen Liaison: To be appointed by the BOS: First appointed – Ted Carr.

Funds supported for Town Hall work

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"The old Cohasset Town Hall is at the heart of Cohasset's character and embodies the 'can do' spirit of Cohasset as it has been used for so many different uses."
— David Farrag, citizen proponent

The Town Hall stands as a symbol of Cohasset. It's served dozens of different purposes over its 150-year life span, each one a reflection of the town's storied history. Besides being a central meeting place for town business, it's served as a theater, a private school, a movie theater, a basketball court, boxing matches, a ballroom, a jailhouse and (most recently discovered) a 'haunted' house.

Serving so many different purposes has put wear and tear on the aging building, but the Town Hall could be restored to a glory worthy of its history. Last year, Town Meeting voters allocated $35,000 of Community Preservation funds for a historic restoration architectural firm to advise the Town on how to best repair the "old" part of Town Hall.

"The old Cohasset Town Hall is at the heart of Cohasset's character and embodies the 'can do' spirit of Cohasset as it has been used for so many different uses," David Farrag, citizen proponent, wrote in his CPC funding application this year.

Now, a year later with an architect on board, physical improvements are ready to be made to the building. Farrag, who has been heading up the Town Hall renovation effort, returned to the Community Preservation Committee to request $300,000 to partially restore the exterior of the building — windows, chimney, gutters and downspouts. The committee gave their full support to the project with a 6-0 vote to recommend it to Town Meeting. It will be the largest monetary project to go before Town Meeting. Voters will have the final say on how CPC funds are spent at Town Meeting March 29.

"We didn't come with any preconceived notions, we knew we were going to discover things as we went along. We're uncovering history as we're going through Town Hall," said Farrag. The proposal is just the first of what may be several phases of restoration work.

Cambridge-based architectural firm Carr, Lynch and Sandell has been evaluating every aspect of the Town Hall since being hired in the late fall. They are working toward a full feasibility study that will give the town a blueprint of what needs to be done to fully restore and optimize the building's infrastructure and space for the future. The five- person Town Hall Restoration and Renovation Committee has been working closely with the architectural firm to establish the scope of the project.

The renovations proposed in this first step are "stand alone" renovations, meaning when interior renovations are done, these items will not need to be re-done, said Farrag. The majority of the $300,000 will go toward restoring the 41 out of the 47 windows of the Town Hall (approximately $120,000). Some of the windows are original to the building, dating back to 1857. Others are from when the Town Hall was significantly renovated in 1928.

The windows will be completely removed and restored to their original luster. The window restoration will take months to complete as only a few windows will be taken at a time and each restoration will take one to two weeks. Storm window will be added and the result will be increased energy efficiency throughout the building.

"Right now, we're basically heating the town common," quipped Farrag.

The remainder of the funds will be used for other needed exterior items. Currently, the chimney is unbraced and literally could fall down in a high wind, "it's in the category of miracle when there are high winds," said lead architect and Cohasset resident Jim Sandell. The chimney will get new flashing, tiebacks and re-pointing.

The cornice, gutters and downspouts will be re-done. Sandell said in heavy rainwater comes down cracks in the gutters landing around the foundation and cracks are already beginning to show.

The long view cost estimate to restore the town hall will fall somewhere between $2 and $5 million. The interior renovation will include mechanical updates for heating, air conditioning, electricity and plumbing. The basement will be recaptured for town record storage, as well as handicap bathrooms and an elevator, just to name a few of the items in the greater scheme.

Farrag recognizes community preservation funds cannot be the sole source of funding for the project. Grants will be sought and private fundraising will be done as well.

For this first step to address major exterior issues, the CPC fully supported the project.

"The Town Hall should be a showpiece," said CPC chairman Stuart Ivimey, adding the project has gotten a lot of community support.

Although the CPC still has a few other project to come before them, CPC member Susan Sardina said these items were urgent, "the longer we let something like this go on, the more expensive it will get…what could be more important than our Town Hall. It is the essence and heart of our community."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Issues, issues

If someone was moving into town this month – given the shortage of election contests -- they might get the impression that Cohasseters are not opinionated and are generally apathetic about their government.

We know that could not be further from the truth. Percolating just under the surface is the same passion for this seaside community and its future that there always has been.

Last year, for example, a town election that was previewed as an "election with no races" – one that could have had a historic low turnout -- changed literally overnight when two candidates launched write-in campaigns for the School Committee.

Things were much quieter for Selectman. Paul Carlson ran unopposed for an "open" seat on the Board of Selectmen. (Incumbent Rob Spofford did not seek reelection). This year, Selectman Gary Vanderweil is not seeking a second term. Karen Quigley and incumbent Selectman Fred Koed are unopposed in their bids for two seats.

In Cohasset there have always been a lot of smart people willing to put their time and energy into town boards and other volunteer activities.

So we hope despite the "bruising battles" of last year's write-in campaign and the divisive override election of two years ago have not deterred potential candidates from seeking office.

Debate is a good thing because airing the issues helps increase awareness by bringing them to the forefront. So this year -- with the exception of the Sewer Commission where there is a race between Wayne Sawchuk and Jim Dow -- that is going to be a bit more difficult.

However, here at the Mariner we would still like to conduct the Question of the Week for the Sewer Commission, School Committee, Planning Board and Selectman candidates. We encourage all those candidates to take part.

Here are next week's questions:

• For Sewer Commission candidates (Wayne Sawchuk and Jim Dow):
In light of the plant overflow events, some residents have no confidence in the Sewer Commission. What can you do to turn that around?

• For Selectman candidates (Fred Koed and Karen Quigley):
Is affordable housing a critical issue for Cohasset?

• For School Committee candidate (Alfred Slanetz):
Have the schools lost ground since the failure of the override two years ago?

• Planning Board candidates (Clark Brewer and Charles Samuelson):
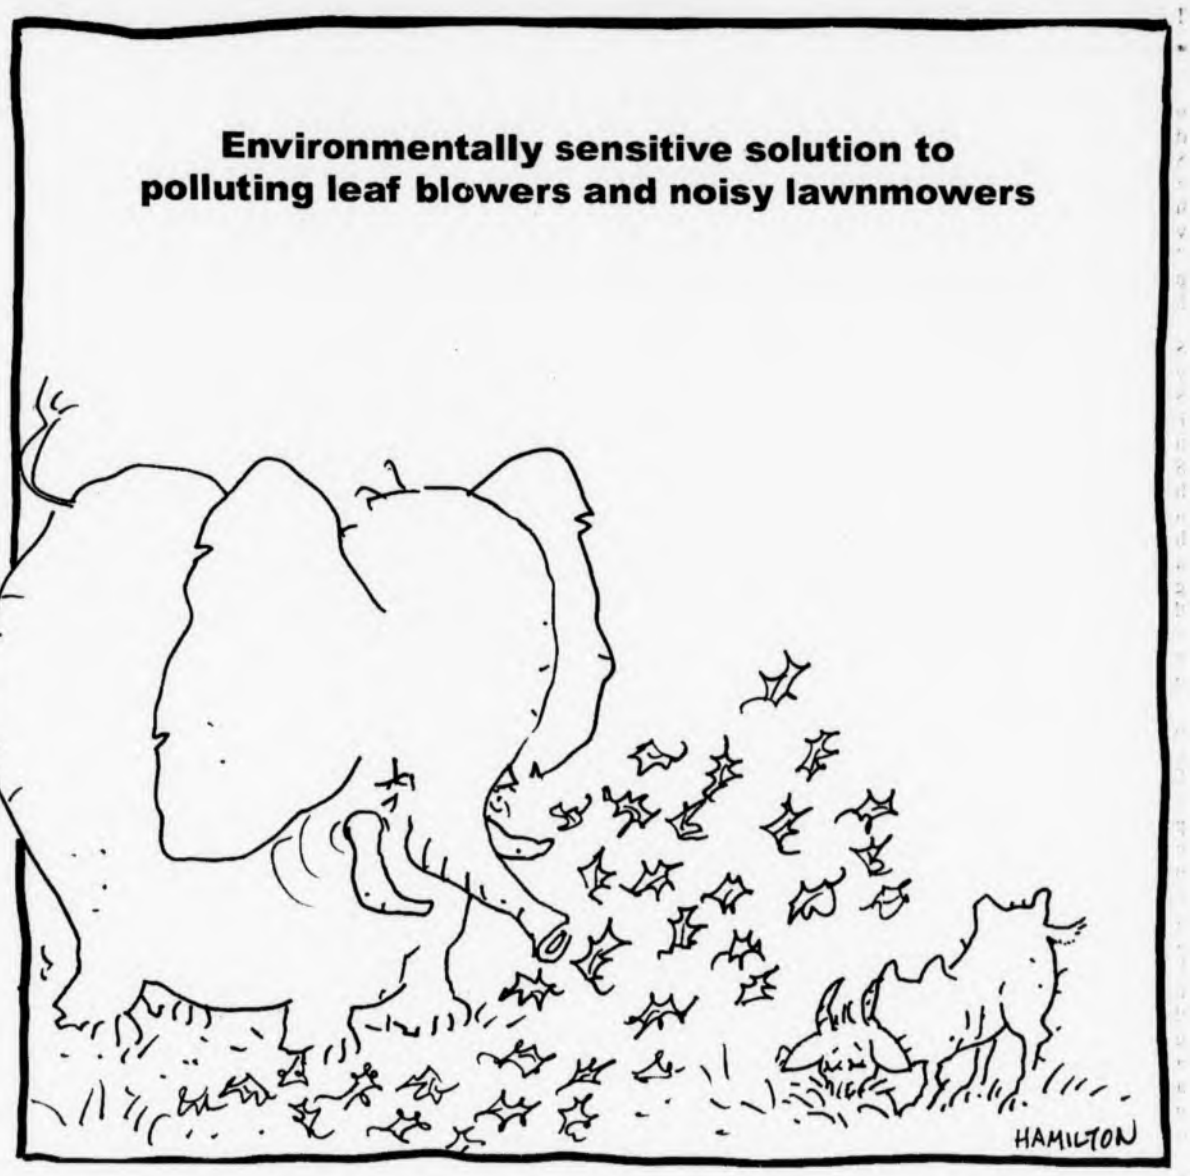
Has the Large House Site Plan Review done its job in controlling "mansionization?"

Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Tuesday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)

Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Tuesday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like.

All candidates running for any office are also invited to submit a photograph and a formal statement announcing their candidacies. There is no word limit on the formal announcement but candidates are encouraged to be as concise as possible.



The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by email at mford@cnc.com.

HEALTH NOTES

Spring and stormwater: a fateful combination

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

While the thermometer may not suggest so — Spring is here and with it comes the fear of flooding for many Cohasset residents whose homes lie in low areas near freshwater marshes and streams and the harbors. Historically flooding was always expected in these areas but lately within the past 10 years the problems have become more acute with greater potential for disaster. The problem is partially explained in the global climate shift that even the skeptics have come to accept as real. However the major and immediate cause of this situation is man-made. Upland development is the root of the problem ignoring stormwater runoff leaving the site and altering historic water conveyance patterns.

Uncontrolled flooding is a potential ecological and human health disaster aside from consideration of the municipal and residential costs these events generate.

The Stormwater Committee in concert with the Board of Health and the Conservation Commission have developed a draft bylaw which will be put before the voting public for approval at the March Town Meeting. The Bylaw is the product of over 18 months of careful research and negotiation. The intent of this effort is to establish a functional review mechanism to bring the problem of stormwater and site runoff in significant development activities under control and mitigation.

The Bylaw is not something out of the blue but actually required by US Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), which recognized the deleterious effects of uncontrolled stormwater upon the water quality of our wetlands, streams, rivers and harbors in the Clean Water Act. The Stormwater Committee was formed of members representing town boards and committees with an active interest in the management of Cohasset's water resources. The Federal deadline to institute some acceptable regulations is May 2008. Without such regulations a town could be liable for fines of up to $10,000/day. The proposed bylaw has been reviewed and revised extensively incorporating comments from various town agencies and committees and finally approved by the Board of Selectmen. This final product will be published in the Town Warrant for a vote at Town Meeting.

Some key features of the bylaw are the definitions and the exclusions under the law and establishment of a tiered review process for site development and redevelopment throughout the Town. The purpose is to bring stormwater and runoff considerations into the granting of building permits and Conservation Commission approval for site activities. The bylaw encourages the use of the panoply of mitigation methods that can significantly reduce or eliminate stormwater runoff. It forces the applicant to increase infiltration of excess water at the sites under construction. The point is to consider the project in terms of its potential to affect off site and downstream land parcels with stormwater leaving the site during and after construction.

One point to consider is the Federal minimum area of concern is once acre of disturbance in Cohasset Bylaw the minimum for review is 500-5,000 square feet. This minimum size was not determined at random but by a careful review of the more recent Cohasset construction permits. The rationale is based on a historic review of Cohasset building permits to determine which range of area disturbances demonstrated a significant increase in the volume of runoff generated. The data revealed that a loss of roughly 20 percent of the site infiltration spikes a significant change in the amount of water leaving a site. The impacts of this excess water leaving the site are in the suspended sediment and contaminants that are carried downstream to the harbor. This "first flush "of stormwater contains the greatest concentration of suspended sediments and pollutants the first few minutes. Roadway oils and greases; animal wastes, septic leakage and suspended dirt and sediment all act to seriously degrade receiving waters or these discharges. This problem is one of both volume and velocity.

As a first step in the process of bringing the existing problems under control the Town has contracted with Coughlin Associates of Stoneham to develop a master plan to establish timelines and activities to resolve problems and deficiencies in our present stormwater collection and discharge system. The BOH and Cohasset DPW with monitoring assistance by Center for Student Coastal Research have begun this process over the past several years with studies identifying "hotspots" of pollutant sources entering the harbor. The Water Department and Board of Health working with Norfolk Ram Engineers have sought and won state grants to help pay for assessment of these hotspots and the engineering and construction of appropriate controls using Best Management Practices to successfully ameliorate the most critical areas of concern around both Lily Pond (the town's key water supply). Cohasset Harbor and Little Harbor the principal receiving water bodies for stormwater in town.

This process is both complex and critical. It will not be resolved by simple solutions. Uncontrolled flooding is a potential ecological and human health disaster aside from consideration of the municipal and residential costs these events generate. This situation affects every taxpayer in direct costs and indirectly through more expensive insurance rates. The Stormwater Bylaw is the keystone to a coordinated attack on the problem and will become the basis to by which we can begin to resolve the acutely dangerous flooding patterns of recent memory.

Please take the time to read through the text of Article XX and get your questions answered by the Board of Health or the Conservation Commission which are sponsoring the article.

And don't forget to vote at the Town Meeting to support this vital and critical piece of environmental regulation.

Material from this column came from the Board of Health, the Stormwater Committee, the Water Resources Protection Committee and many others. Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Hammerhead turn planned for Spring St.

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush update – CBB, the MBTA's contractor, returned a week ago and marked out the delineation for a hammerhead turn at the end of Spring Street on the Main Street side of the road closure. So what's a "hammer head turn?" It is a turn around, shaped like the head of a hammer, wherein the vehicle can pull into one end of the "head" and back into the opposite "head" and then pull out to the street with the front of the vehicle facing the direction of travel.

Well here's Cohasset's situation on Spring Street, now a dead end road. If a large emergency vehicle (think fire truck) needs to enter Spring Street from S. Main Street across from the Historical Society, to get back to S. Main Street the vehicle must back out all the way to S. Main Street. Not only is this a cumbersome operation, but it could delay the ability of the fire truck to get to another emergency location. Thus, a hammerhead turn around will enable the fire engine to turn around and drive out as quickly as possible. Our goal now is to make sure that the Fire Chief agrees that the design will provide ample room to maneuver our largest fire truck. So, we are preparing to meet with the chief on location to review its dimensions and make sure it is adequate.

Little Harbor project – This past Monday morning we had the opportunity to meet with our contractor, L&M Holdings, along with National Grid and project engineering representatives. The issues were something that we hinted at in the past, but which represents a genuine hazard to the construction workers as well as possible inconvenience for area residents. On Jerusalem Road, from Rust Way to Linden Drive, where the new sewer lines are scheduled to be buried, we found several different sets of electrical lines directly buried about 2 feet below the asphalt. The contractor inadvertently hit a 5,000-volt line with their equipment. Fortunately, the contractor was using a large piece of power digging equipment and the operator was isolated from the high voltage. Had the contractor been digging by hand with a shovel, the worker could have been seriously harmed of even killed.

Needless to say, L&M was very hesitant to go back and do more digging in this area, either by hand or by machine. As a matter of fact, any digging near buried power lines must be done by a person with special training and certification, which most contractors don't have on their payroll. At the meeting last Monday, National Grid was extremely cooperative and agreed to supply a construction worker with the necessary background and skill to do all of the digging within 18 inches of the power lines. This is really a big deal because not only because of the 5,000-volt line which must be avoided, but each dwelling has a 240 volt service under ground that connects to the power line and crosses the location of the new sewer line. In addition, from Rust Way to Linden Drive, National Grid has agreed to place brand new underground conduit. Thus, if for any reason in the future they need to upgrade the underground wiring, the conduits will be in place. All National Grid needs to do is to pull wires through the conduit and the road surface does not need to be disturbed. We wish to thank National Grid for their cooperation and foresight.

Little Harbor Project schedule update – The schedule was received on Monday, Feb. 25th from the contractor. It's possible that part of "Jerusalem Road, Rust Way to Deep Run" task could begin as early as March 3rd rather than March 10th as listed in the schedule. This does depend on the weather and when National Grid actually begins their cooperative work with our contractor. This scheduling variation demonstrates how dynamic schedules are in any construction project. At best, we should consider that schedules are a guideline.

Tube demonstrates pavement settling.

Another photo of trench settling.

Construction trenches and paving — We've spoken about delaying the final paving after a construction project takes place in the roadway, particularly one that involves deep trenches. The accompanying photos will give you a good indication of what we are talking about. S. Main Street was dug up for new water lines last summer. The trench was backfilled, the earth was well compacted and the paving was patched. Now after 7 months, the patch has settled as the pictures show. That's why the DPW requires a contractor to wait and do final paving after the ground really has a chance to settle.

Little Harbor Project Schedule as of Feb. 22, 2008
Sewer Mainline: Installation of the main sewer line in the roadway
Sewer Services: Installation stub pipe that will go from the main sewer line to the edge of private property
Erosion Control: Adding silt fence and hay bales alongside work area to keep construction debris from wetland areas.

Piracy on the high seas

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

On the morning of Nov. 15, 1772, Capt. Joseph Doane Jr. was sailing along the Cape between Nantucket and Chatham when he spotted the fishing vessel Abigail flying a signal of distress.

Aboard, he found the decks awash with blood and a single survivor, a terrified 21-year-old sailor from Chatham named Ansel Nickerson, who told him this story:

Abigail had left Boston the day before bound for her homeport of Chatham. Off the Cape, they were approached by an unidentified schooner. Nickerson, fearing impressment into His Majesty's Navy, went over the side, clinging to the taffrail.

Some men from the schooner boarded Abigail and set about murdering the crew, Ansel's brothers, Thomas and Sparrow, and brother-in-law Elisha Newcomb. A fifth member of the crew, William Kent Jr., a boy of 13, was kidnapped.

Nickerson's story was a sensation, not only on the Cape but in far away Boston, where the firebrand Sam Adams was stirring up the masses against the governor, Thomas Hutchinson, and recollections of the Boston Massacre were still fresh.

"The conversation of the town and country has been about the strange occurrences of last week, a piracy said to have been committed on a vessel bound for Cape Cod, 3 men killed, a boy missing, and only one man escaped to tell the news," noted John Adams, the Braintree barrister, in his diary.

Nickerson was congratulated on his narrow escape but his story didn't satisfy Governor Hutchinson, who suspected anti-British forces were at work, and the young sailor was arrested and brought to Boston.

After questioning by the governor himself as well as Admiral John Montagu, Lt. Gov. Andrew Oliver and Secretary Thomas Flucker, Nickerson was charged with piracy and robbery on the high seas.

Nickerson's trial was set for Dec. 16, 1772, in a Special Court of Admiralty, which meant he would be judged by appointed officials and not a jury, which angered the patriots in Boston but due to court delays, it didn't start until the end of July.

Meantime, Hutchinson noted that the prisoner "was often visited in prison by some of the most active persons in the opposition . . . the sons of liberty took part with him and professed to make no doubt of (the pirate vessel) being a man of war schooner."

When the trial opened, who showed up as Nickerson's lawyer but John Adams, along with his colleague, John Quincy Jr., the same duo that defended the Brits in the Boston Massacre.

They charged him six pounds, 13 shillings, a modest sum. But it didn't matter. Their client stiffed them. Nickerson's IOU can be seen today among the Adams papers at the Massachusetts Historical Society. But I digress

The minutes of the trial have been lost to history in the momentous events that unfolded in Boston in the early 1770s but Nickerson was acquitted or, as Gov. Hutchinson put it "escaped punishment of a murder, which may be ranked among the most atrocious ever committed."

Or as a broadside published, author unknown but obviously a Nickerson partisan, announced for all "a more impartial (trial), perhaps, was never known in America, or elsewhere."

Nickerson went back to Chatham and blended in with the rest of the population. He died sometime prior to 1790 either at sea or on the island of Martinique (who knows), either a guilty or an innocent man (who knows that too?)

(The story of Ansel Nickerson and the events aboard Abigail and the trial that followed are told in more detail in "Witches, Rakes and Rogues, True Stories of Scam, Scandal, Murde , and Mayhem in Boston, 1630-1775," by D. Brenton Simons.)

Rekindling a love affair with food

TOWARD A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JOANN MIRISE

When asked what comes to mind upon hearing the phrase "chocolate cake," Americans were more likely to say "guilt," while the French replied "celebration".

I love food. I love that it sustains my body and gives me the energy to enjoy life. I love the miracle of planting a tiny seed in a spot of rich earth only to be rewarded, in time, with a delicious fruit or vegetable. I love that food offers us a glimpse into the culture of a place -- its people and environment. And I love food because it is so completely sensual -- the taste, smell, texture, beauty. Divine.

I have not always had an enjoyable relationship with food. Like a lot of Americans, I have sifted with confusion through the food fads du jour -- carbs vs. protein, good fats vs. bad fats, sugar, cholesterol, calories etc. In the name of "superfood" nutrition I have forced down shriveled, bitter berries from Tibet, powdered cruciferous root vegetables from Peru and shots of juiced wheat grass from a friend's backyard. And, how many times at the waiter's post-entree question, "Dessert?", did I politely decline? Too many, I'm afraid.

A few years ago, a social scientist studied the food attitudes of people across cultures. When asked what comes to mind upon hearing the phrase "chocolate cake," Americans were more likely to say "guilt," while the French replied "celebration". Americans worry more about food and derive less pleasure from eating than people in any other nation surveyed.

Our concern about food should be no surprise. Our post-industrial society created an opportunity for agriculture to become big business. In the name of corporate profit, much of our food has been replaced with ingestible junk -- food-like substances — that is highly processed, chemically-derived, and in some cases genetically-modified. The word agribusiness now has its place in the dictionary, and our nation has its place as one of the unhealthiest developed countries despite our wealth and freedom. In addition, by reducing our food to fodder for the laboratory we have blindly allowed so-called experts to tell us what we should and should not eat. We are bombarded with daily news reports detailing the latest (usually questionable) nutritional study. Eggs bad. No, eggs good. Butter bad. No, butter good. As a result we have lost our own common sense. And we seem to have entered a whole new realm of foolery when the blurb "Contains Whole Grains!" now appears on a box of Lucky Charms.

As if we didn't have enough to worry about, now we have the added dimension of concerning ourselves with the environmental impact of our food choices. Is my food pesticide-free? Is it in season? Is it locally grown? Are the farmworkers treated justly and fairly? It's no wonder we are so often left overwhelmed and bewildered by the question, "What's for dinner?" No wonder so many of us throw our hands in the air and gas it to the nearest drive-thru.

What happened to just eating real food? Fresh, diverse fruits, vegetables, legumes, nuts, whole grains, with fish and pasture-raised animals as a complement (if chosen). What happened to eating the delicacies of our specific regions, defined by the uniqueness of landscape and location? And what happened to the joy of cooking, the company of family and friends, and getting lost in the pleasure of the meal?

It's been my goal to recapture my love of food, and I hope, encourage others to do the same. The following are a few steps I have taken to elevate food to the level it deserves in our lives.

I buy quality, real food even when it requires re-prioritization of my family's budget. (The average American spends less than 10 percent of their income on food while our European counterparts, who, by the way, have higher ratings in health and quality of life indexes, spend double this.) I choose to limit purchases to whole foods, organic when possible, and foods with ingredients I can understand. I choose to support local farms, farmers' markets and community co-ops. And finally, I have taken to successfully growing and raising food in my backyard.

I have also reclaimed the art of preparing food. Thanks to inspiration from my favorite chefs I manage to flow instead of stumble around the kitchen. Because I have found local, seasonal food to be so delicious I have taught myself how to preserve it so that I can savor the flavors on a frigid, February day in New England. Could I have ever imagined that I, a self-professed urbanite with a black thumb, would be growing food, canning tomatoes...and liking it?

And lastly, I eat. Hopefully with family, sometimes with friends, and always with gratitude and love. To know that these changes also happen to dramatically lessen my impact on our planet is the perfectly ripe, in-season, locally grown, pesticide-free cherry on top. Bon appetit!

DPW clearing Treats Pond drain at Sandy Cove. This will not be necessary if the pipe is extended to clear the sand, Jim Drysdale said.

Ill-defined, Everglades-like scheme

COMMENTARY

JIM DRYSDALE

Many will question whether improving the aesthetics of a private pond and private beach merits this public expenditure in our debt-ridden town.

The Board of Selectmen has adopted an article for Town Warrant originally sponsored by some residents of Sandy Cove to convert Treats Pond on Atlantic Avenue into a tidal pond. This may require taking land by eminent domain. The project has an estimated cost of about $1.7 million with 65 percent coming from a congressional earmark to the Army Corps of Engineers (ACE) obtained through the efforts of a former congressman that lives in this area. The town's share will be 35 percent, which would be about $595,000. In addition, the town may already have incurred a $100,000 debt for a preliminary study but this cost is being disputed. Our total could therefore be about $700,000, which is comparable to some overrides and deserves scrutiny.

Many will question whether improving the aesthetics of a private pond and private beach merits this public expenditure in our debt-ridden town. However, proponents hope that the project will also reduce a serious flooding problem in this area. This may be wishful thinking. ACE has no mandate for flood control and offers no such plans. Indeed, flood control is not even mentioned as a possible benefit in their latest project description. Rather than spend money on this pig in a poke, the town should first explore much simpler remedies at hand that would prevent flooding and cost less than 1 percent of the ACE project.

The flooding arises from a town drain from Treats Pond to Sandy Cove that periodically gets blocked by sand and can cause overflows after heavy rains unless cleared by DPW. Flooding can be severe since many homes lie on the flood plain and are also subject to storm water runoff from overlooking properties. To complicate matters, some homes and roads are built on fill which restricts the dispersion area for storm water and funnels it onto properties at the original level.

A similar situation occurred at the north end of the beach with the stream feeding Treats Pond and was simply solved by extending an existing drainage pipe. The same contractor estimates that extending the Treats Pond pipe to be clear of the sand would cost about $4,000. Regrettably, this simple remedy is opposed by some south end residents who "expressed concerns about the safety of small children and pets as well as aesthetics" (ACE to JD). This opposition seems to be the major reason why ACE devised plans to transfer the entire watershed to nearby Whale Meadow under the guise of a "salt marsh restoration." Not surprisingly, overtures to persuade residents there to accept the proposed 42-in. pipe and tide gate failed, even with considerable financial inducements. The selectmen therefore may propose to take land by eminent domain to create a new outfall at Whale Meadow by blasting a 250-yard trench through a 15-foot high ledge to Treats Pond.

This is an unnecessary encroachment on private property without obvious benefit to the town. It is also unnecessary since the town already owns the drainage easement on Sandy Cove. The easement was gifted to the town in 1964 to maintain Treats Pond in "its natural state as a marsh pond" (Norfolk County Land Court Document 259864, plan 3183D). This restriction, shown in current land plan 3183F, is continued in subsequent subdivisions and in the Sandy Cove South Association's "Declaration of Restrictive Covenants" LCD 388218. The pipe can be extended in two days for less than $4,000. This will immediately stop the flooding. In addition, rain gardens and other storm water remedies could interrupt and cleanse runoff from overlooking properties. These measures, together with the advent of the sewer next year, will essentially eliminate both the flooding and the pollution. Before spending $600,000 it seems worthwhile to try this simple option.

In summary, it is regrettable that the Board of Selectmen has chosen to embark on an expensive, ill-defined, Everglades-like scheme that does not address the fundamental problem of storm water flooding. It is also a sad commentary that they would pursue this ecologically questionable project at the expense of so many more deserving public projects. If the real objective is to improve the aesthetics and property values on a private beach with public money, let's all share in this beach with free and open access. If it is to clean up a private pond, let's leave that to the owners. If it is to relieve the overriding problem of flooding, let's deal with that directly and sensibly.

Treat's Pond has become a shallow puddle choked with phragmite.

Flooding, restoration and Treat's Pond

COMMENTARY

PRISCILLA AND AMO HOUGHTON

To accomplish these goals, the Corps plans to reconnect the pond to the ocean with a tide gate to regulate flow into and out of the pond.

At town meeting on Saturday, March 29, you will be asked to vote on a warrant article relating to an Army Corps of Engineers project to restore Treat's Pond and control flooding on Atlantic Avenue. The total cost of the project is estimated to be $1.7 million. The Federal Government has allocated $1.1 million to the Army Corps of Engineers, provided that local sources fund the remaining 35 percent or $595,000. The town's share is estimated to fall between $50,000 and $300,000 and is based on an expectation of a significant contribution from State sources.

As many are aware, the low area of Atlantic Avenue between Whitehead Road and Lothrop Lane becomes severely flooded at every major rainstorm. This winter alone, properties in the area have been inundated three times. In the Mother's Day storm two years ago, cars parked in driveways were flooded up to their windows. Most of the water comes from the high ground on the west side of Atlantic Avenue. It cascades down the ledge and flows into catch basins that connect under the roadway to culverts that terminate in people's yards. From there it travels in a ditch along Atlantic Ave. and across yards and driveways into Treat's Pond.

Before the mid-1800s, the pond was connected to Sandy Cove. Flow out of the pond to the ocean relieved flooding, while flow into the pond created a healthy salt marsh environment for aquatic plants and animals. After the devastating Lighthouse Gale of 1851, the configuration of Sandy Cove changed, cutting off the connection between the pond and the ocean. Today Treat's Pond is landlocked, separated by more than 1,000 feet from the ocean. It has become a shallow puddle choked with phragmite. Various attempts have been made to reconnect the pond to the ocean, but all have been defeated by the sea and the accreting sand. When the pond fills after a rainstorm, water backs up, flooding some 26 residential properties.

The Army Corps project will restore the salt marsh and eliminate the flooding. To accomplish these goals, the Corps plans to reconnect the pond to the ocean with a tide gate to regulate flow into and out of the pond. For the past two years the Corps has conducted studies to determine the effectiveness of the proposed tidal exchange in eliminating phragmite, reducing bacteria, restoring the marsh and controlling flooding. They have also examined three potential routes for the pipe to determine the most cost-effective and efficient. The routes would result in outfalls either (a) on Sandy Cove, (b) in Cohasset harbor at Margin Street and Howard Gleason Road or (c) in the outer Harbor at Whale Meadow. The latter appears to be the most favorable because it is the shortest route, has high tidal exchange, and would be subject to less storm damage.

The town has recently supported and funded several flood control and ecological restoration projects including James Brook/Jacob's Meadow, Straits Pond, Little Harbor and the Border Street culvert. It is expected that there will be continuing support and appropriations for these and similar projects in the future. The Treat's Pond project is unique in that it will be funded almost entirely by federal and state grants. The town's share will be a small percentage of the cost. The federal grant, however, is contingent on the implementation of the Army Corps of Engineers plan. Under the Federal Clean Water Act the Corps has jurisdiction over Treat's Pond so that any alternative to their plan would require approval and permitting by them. If the vote fails at town meeting, Cohasset will still be obliged to eliminate the flooding and address the ecological health issues of the pond — but at its own expense, without federal funding. Please support this project and vote affirmatively on Saturday, March 29. We will provide more detailed information about the Treat's Pond project in subsequent articles for the Mariner.

WWTP overwhelmed by stormwater

COMMENTARY

CATHY WITKOS AND JOE COGGINS

Raw sewage was flowing down the driveway towards Elm Street at 8pm and still very much in evidence at 6am.

As you may know, the Wastewater Treatment Plant overflowed during the heavy rains on Feb. 13. What you may not know is that this is the fourth overflow into Jacob's Meadow and our backyards within the past two years.

Why is the plant overflowing? Simply put, because the system is overwhelmed by stormwater volume during rain events.

The return of the Greenbush Line, the disregard of engineering studies advising upstream mitigation of stormwater, and the James Brook drainage project have dramatically increased the amount of stormwater that floods Jacob's Meadow and the abutting properties.

Stormwater infiltrates aging, porous clay sewer pipes. Coupled with sump pumps illegally hooked into sewer connections there is no way for the plant to handle the flow. Deluged, the WWTP overflows adding effluent to stormwater. The result is a bacterial cocktail that pollutes Jacob's Meadow and the Harbor, and poses a health hazard not just to abutters but also to all who swim, sail or visit the Harbor.

Inflow and infiltration is a serious problem. Designed for a maximum 400,000 gallons a day, the WWTP was hit with 1,700,000 gallons of water during the Mother's Day Storm of 2006. Until this problem is solved, the sewage will overflow, partially treated at best, and will pollute the Harbor waters. And still the Sewer Commissioners and their engineer push on to hook up 450 more homes to this disaster.

Let us be perfectly clear on this, we want our neighbors on Little Harbor to be on the sewer system. Not one Jacobs Meadow abutter, to date, has asked that any town initiatives be stopped or money be wasted.

However, we have an aging, porous system that is unable to cope with existing infiltration. How will the expansion affect this? Discussions of new technologies and membrane enhancements leading to higher capacity are little comfort if the membranes are bypassed. Promised plans for I&I control are accompanied by assessments of futility.

The abutters of Jacob's Meadow and the James Brook ask only that the WWTP be as efficient, unobtrusive and safe as possible.

Here is a little history…

On Mothers Day 2006, the WWTP overflowed during heavy rains dumping untreated sewage into Jacob's Meadow. Unaware, children and pets were in our yards splashing in stormwater containing raw sewage with bacteria levels that posed a health hazard. (When levels reach 200 parts per 100ml the Board of Health closes the Harbor for swimming. Readings in our yards exceeded 49,000 parts per 100ml, and have exceeded 200,000 parts per 100ml at the point of release.) Abutters were not notified of an overflow nor warned of the health hazard. Two days after the overflow an abutter discovered the WWTP had overflowed and asked the sewer commission for details.

Abutters then requested a meeting with town officials, the Sewer Commission and their engineer. After much discussion the engineer assured us that this situation would not happen again as the plant was going to hook up a bypass pipe. This 'solution' bypasses the meadow and our yards and dumps effluent into the Harbor. This is moving the problem down the line, not solving it.

We were told this pipe would be hooked up by the Fall of 2007 but it is still weeks away from completion, and we have experienced yet another overflow. At that same meeting the Sewer Commission's engineer stated we would receive regular updates on the plant upgrade and bypass pipe. We have never received a single update.

Additionally, the Sewer Commission established a protocol to be followed to notify abutters before an overflow occurs. This did not happen.

There is no need to go into the details of the overflow on Patriots Day 2007 since the story is the same: no notification to the abutters (again, an abutter walked down to find the plant overflowing and notified the other abutters); insanely high bacteria levels dumped into the meadow, and flowing into the harbor when the tide cycle allowed.

Following the most recent overflow on Valentines Day 2008, the Mariner printed an article detailing the event. As disturbing as the facts in this account are, the Mariner reporter was given inaccurate timelines and comments crafted to downplay the dangerousness of this event. For example, the impression that this was a one-hour event that was quickly contained is patently untrue. Raw sewage was flowing down the driveway towards Elm Street at 8pm and still very much in evidence at 6am. Successful containment in the eyes of the sewer operators consists of hosing the untreated effluent into the marsh. This effluent mixes with the already contaminated stormwater and floods the yards of every meadow abutter. When the tide cycle allows, the gates open and this sewage hits the open harbor.

That brings us to we are right now. On last Monday night a large group of abutters and concerned citizens met yet again with the Sewer Commission and their engineer to hear the details of the most recent overflow. Here are some of the highlights:

- While the Mariner was told the overflow started at 8:30pm, the plant engineer told Joe Coggins on the night of the overflow that it was clocked in as starting at 7:45pm. Joe is the abutter who heard the overflow from his home on Elm Street and went down to the plant to find the plant operator frantically trying to control the overflow. The raw waste from the tank was halfway down the driveway of the plant and was being hosed directly into the meadow by the plant operators. Keep in mind this polluted water is not only going into our backyards but also into your Harbor.
- The plant operator said during the meeting that he "dances in the overflow effluent" and he is fine, so what is the big deal? Exposing families to a health risk should be a big deal.
- In his official report, the plant operator said that "at about 3pm on Feb. 13, I thought there was a good chance of an overflow…and I went home to get any gear needed for an overflow event. We met back at 6 p.m. and moved to higher ground anything in the plant lower than waist level, this is about the high level of foam (effluent) in the plant during an overflow event." Did he call anyone? Did the Sewer Commission, knowing that we were in the middle of a heavy rain execute an official check on the status of the plant? Did anyone follow the newly established protocol and notify the abutters prior to overflow? No, no and no.
- A Sewer Commissioner noticed foam on the driveway; admitted he wrongly assumed the extreme overflow pipe was completed; didn't report the overflow to anyone; didn't initiate the reverse 911 protocol, didn't even speak with the plant operators to assure that the operation was not in distress.
- It was not until just before 11 pm that evening that a reverse 911 call was issued.

For those readers who have made it to the end of this letter, thank you. If you wish to obtain more information, monitor what actions are being taken or become involved in helping us correct this situation, please email us at jacobsmeadow@comcast.net. Your concern is appreciated.

Attorney General approves village zoning bylaws

"It's an affirmation that the zoning bylaws were legally done in way that was sound."

— Angus Jennings, consultant

On Monday, the town received notice the village zoning bylaw passed at Town Meeting got the stamp of approval from the Attorney General's office. All zoning bylaws must be approved by the Attorney General to ensure none of the parts violate the constitution and adhered to procedural requirements.

"Until the final Attorney General approval is in hand, there is still some uncertainty," said Angus Jennings of Concord Square Development, the town's consultant on the village zoning bylaws, adding the approval is more a formality than anything.

"It's an affirmation that the zoning bylaws were legally done in way that was sound," said Jennings.

Although property owners or developers could have applied under the new bylaws as soon as they were approved at Town Meeting, the applicants would have done so at their own risk, said Jennings. With the village zoning bylaws officially in the books, applicants can now propose projects under the revised bylaws without any risk of them being altered.

Jennings said he and his team are currently working with the planning board on design review guidelines for the village and will be back on the planning board agenda in the spring.

South Shore Greenway meeting scheduled

South Shore Greenway final presentation meeting will take place at 7 p.m., on Monday, March 3, at Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, next to Town Hall.

Conway School of Landscape Design will present their plans for a connected pathway through five South Shore towns.

Lady Skippers take the tournament opener

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The last time the Cohasset High girls basketball team played West Bridgewater at home it wasn't much of a game. The Skippers met the Wildcats in the consolation round of the Cohasset Holiday Basketball Tournament and won, 48-15.

The Wildcats looked out of sorts and 1,000-point scorer and Mayflower League all-star Julie Conrad was held in check for the entire game.

During the Wildcats first round game in the Div. 4 South Sectional Wednesday night, Conrad dropped 29 points in an overtime win against Marian. A Conrad lay-up with one second left put the game into overtime. The 15-8, No. 7 seed Wildcats have the look and feel of a team with something to prove.

Fast forward to Friday, Feb. 29, 7:00 p.m., the CHS gymnasium. Things are going to be different. At least the lifelessness the Skippers saw from the Wildcats nearly two months ago won't be repeated.

WBHS coach Steve Barrett is too good of a coach and Conrad is too good a player.

That being said, No. 2 Cohasset has bee like a snowflake at the top of Mount Everest since that December meeting—by now they are in sight of base camp and closing in fast. They are much bigger, stronger, faster and better than before.

"The kids found a way to win and that is what they have done all year."
Cohasset coach, John LeVangie

The Skippers disposed of Bishop Connolly, 50-41, in their opening round home game, Wednesday night. They didn't play their best basketball of the year, but at this time of the year, a win is a win.

"We won and that is the big thing," said Cohasset coach John LeVangie. "It was not one of our better games of the year, and part of that was because Bishop Connolly was a very scrappy team. But the kids thought we had a chance to play a lot better."

Experience proved to be an important factor in the win, as LeVangie noted that his upperclassmen kept the team on the right track during the opening round win. Kayla Farren (Jr., point guard) played only a few minutes in the game because of an injury. Back-up point guard Lindsay Davis stepped in and played a solid game in the backcourt to help secure the win.

Farren is expected to be back for Friday's game against West Bridgewater.

"When you don't play you're A game and you win that is a good thing," LeVangie said. "The kids found a way to win and that is what they have done all year."

Sammi Lehr (Jr.) and Carly Salerno (Jr.) made big contributions in the win according to LeVangie.

"We need to step it up a notch Friday," LeVangie said. "We'll take tonight, run with it and move on."

Nantucket and Hull advanced to the quarterfinals on the bottom of the Cohasset bracket. That game is set for Friday at 5:30 p.m. On the other side of the brackets No. 1 Sacred Heart lost a shocker to No. 16 Millis. That leaves Millis, South Shore Christian Academy, Cathedral and Chatham.

With the No. 1 seed going down, that leaves Cohasset as the top dog remaining out of the eight teams left in Div. 4 south.

Best effort not enough

CHS skaters fall to Westwood in first round

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

It only took 16 seconds into Wednesday's Div. 3 South Sectional hockey game against Westwood and the Cohasset faithful at the Bog in Kingston already looked and felt like Ralphie Parker from A Christmas Story when he first thinks he didn't get his Red Ryder BB gun.

Moment's earlier pre-game innocence and excitement had the place to a near boil. And then poof, Steve McManus found Steve Musto in front of the Cohasset net where he deposited the puck for the 1-0 lead. The Wolverines, a dark horse No. 9 seed out of the Tri-Valley Conference, looked ready to pounce.

And most people hadn't even settled into their seats yet.

But, No. 8 Cohasset fought back, eventually losing the game 2-0, ending its season with a 13-5-3 overall record. The opening tally could have opened the floodgates and put junior goalie Jonny Wade on his heels, but it didn't.

Just three minutes later Alex Goetz fired a rocket that went off the crossbar, a sign of things to come for the Skippers. The remaining 45 minutes of hockey proved to be tournament worthy. Like all good games, a few inches to the left, an extra man on the ice or a break from the hockey gods one way or the other could have changed the course of events.

In the end though, the Skippers didn't have enough to get the job done.

"This is an emotional end to the season," stated Cohasset High hockey coach Bob Walsh

Duffy family inducted into wrestling Hall of Fame

Cohasset family honored for service to CHS wrestling

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Duffy family of Cohasset was recently inducted into the Massachusetts Wrestling Coaches Hall of Fame for their work done with the Cohasset High School wrestling program. Dan and Rosemary have three sons who all participated for the Skippers wrestling team, Brian (1995), Kevin (1997) and Danny (2001).

The Baird family, also from Cohasset, was inducted into the MWCHOF in 2004. Both Dan Duffy and Bill Baird played major roles in building the Cohasset Wrestling Boosters in the late 1980's and early to mid-90's.

According to Dan Duffy, the Boosters were always in the red ink or just breaking even until things turned around. He credits the success to a large contingent of families that helped throughout the years. He and his family's longevity with the program helped reinforce a strong foundation.

When Dan left as president in 2001, there were two $1,000 scholarships given out to students, both male and female, wrestler or not. They are still handed out today.

"There were a lot of people involved, a lot of families," Dan Duffy said. "It was a real group effort."

His wife, Rosemary agreed.

"We are deeply honored but there were so many wonderful families involved," she said. "This is for a lot of other families as well."

Cohasset head coach Torin Sweeney nominated the Duffy's to the hall's board of electors (including himself). He credits their longevity with the program and wonderful commitment as just part of the reason for the induction.

"They were always supportive always helping out at matches," Sweeney said about Dan and Rosemary. "They always asked, 'what can we do to make your job easier.' They helped run the concessions at the Cohasset Wrestling Tournament, they were involved with the banquets, and they just were so supportive of the wrestling staff.

"They couldn't have been better supporters and were instrumental in setting up the offices of the Boosters Club."

As for the three boys who took it to the mats over the course of 12 years, Brian, Kevin and Dan, all were captains and exceptional wrestlers.

Sweeney had glowing remarks for each.

Brian Duffy: "He was a really quiet leader," Sweeney said. "He led by example and was a great student."

Kevin Duffy: "He was a little more outspoken and an intense kid," Sweeney said. "He was a through e-mail late Wednesday night, adding to what he already told the press post-game. "I've known Mike Welby (the coach of Westwood) for a couple of seasons now, and he always gets the most out of his guys—my hat is off to the Westwood boys.

"I felt that we out played them in the second period and had our scoring chances but we just couldn't put it in the net. The third period, we came out ready to play but took five penalties and in a 1-0 game, it's difficult to win when you spend one half of the period in the penalty box."

The score remained 1-0 after two periods. If Westwood owned the first, Cohasset had the second frame, out skating, out shooting and out playing the bigger Wolverines.

Walsh and his assistant coaches reminded his team they needed to step it up after the first period.

"We talked to the guys about being a little bit more aggressive and going after the puck," Walsh said. "I think at the end of the first we all agreed that we had seen just about everything Westwood had. I think (our guys) were nervous in the first period and we got them to settle down in that second period."

After the first goal slipped in, Wade became the story of the game, stopping a number of Westwood shots.

"The first goal is tough, the first shot is tough," an emotional Wade said after the game. "You got to remember, it's a long game you have 45 minutes to play. You got to settle down, you are still in it"

Settling Wade down after the first shot wasn't a problem Wednesday, but Walsh conceded he was nervous when that opening shot got through.

"We decide typically how his night is going to go if he stops the first three shots and when the first shot went in we (coaches) started looking at each other like 'oh my god' but he settled right down and got right back in the game," Walsh said.

"Jonny Wade played his skull off tonight, he made some great saves and played a really great game."

Westwood added its second goal of the game when Perry Treon found the back of the net at 11:24.

"In 19 years of coaching both as an amateur and a professional, this team, and my seniors in particular, had more heart than most. I will miss them as if it were like I was sending my own sons off to college next year."
Cohasset High hockey coach Bob Walsh

Cohasset had a number of scoring opportunities mostly in that second period. Both lines applied decent pressure but never had that one clear-cut moment where a goal seemed imminent. Westwood did just enough to hold Cohasset off.

"A bounce here a bounce there it's a different hockey game," Walsh said.

Cohasset will graduate five seniors Alex Goetz, Pat Doonan, Charlie Czerkawski, Frank Wheelwright and R.K. Quebec.

"I've never had a group of guys like this, the four captains were the heart and soul of this team," Walsh said afterwards.

He also added later Wednesday night how proud he was of his team for the way they played all season.

"Despite the penalties, I can't say enough about how proud I am of my guys not only for this game but how they carried themselves all season," he said. "This is my second season with some of these guys and a closeness develops after a couple of full seasons that makes this type of life lesson so hard.

"In 19 years of coaching both as an amateur and a professional, this team, and my seniors in particular, had more heart than most. I will miss them as if it were like I was sending my own sons off to college next year."

CAMP JOBS RULE! STUDENTS DISCOVER THAT CAMP CAN BE A POWERFUL RESUME-BUILDER

BY BETTE BUSSEL, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, AMERICAN CAMP ASSOCIATION, NEW ENGLAND

With Spring Break just a few weeks away and college students arriving home, it's a great time to think about what these young people are going to be doing for work over the summer. Over one million college students will be working at camp this summer. In increasing numbers, college students are recognizing the value of a camp job in preparing them for the corporate world.

Camp prepares students for corporate America by teaching leadership, team-building, and problem-solving skills - traits that are key to success in the 21st century. By working with groups of campers, camp counselors learn:

- relationship building
- motivational skills
- risk management
- decision making
- prioritizing
- negotiation skills
- leadership and group development
- problem-solving

Camps ensure that counselors will be prepared for their duties by providing training prior to the camp season. During these seven to ten days of instruction, counselors learn child development, leadership, and problem-solving skills, etc. Learning continues throughout the camp season with on-going training opportunities. Many camp staff members also hold specialty certifications in concentrated areas.

Many successful leaders in numerous fields attribute their achievements to camp experiences in their childhood and youth. For example, Henry Thomas, President and CEO of the Urban League in Springfield, Massachusetts, says his experiences at Camp Atwater - one of the country's oldest camps for African American children - gave him self-confidence, self-definition, and a network of friendships for life.

For more information about searching for summer camp in New England, the American Camp Association, New England —the region's leading source for camp information—provides online and print resources.

three sport kid but his passion was wrestling."

Duffy was the only ever All-State champion (1997) in the history of Cohasset wrestling.

Dan Duffy: "He was a great student and a three sport athlete who took wrestling to heart," Sweeney said. "He did a nice job and never missed a practice."

As for the Duffy's they had nothing but praise for Sweeney and all the assistant coaches over the years.

"Torin Sweeney, Ricky Rourke and Peter Buckley were all such great influences," Rosemary said. "They taught the boys how to behave, to be gentleman and how to toe the line in school, the kind of guys you would want as examples for your children."

Dan agreed.

"Torin (Sweeney) taught them about wrestling and how to conduct oneself in life," he said.

Cohasset Sports Briefly

First and second grade Cohasset Youth Lacrosse Clinic

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse is sponsoring a clinic for boys and girls in the first and second grades to take place during the months of April and May of this year. There will be a total of six sessions of approximately one hour each to be held late Saturday afternoons at approximately 4 p.m. with three sessions each in April and May.

The goal of the sessions is to provide a skill focus atmosphere enhanced by fun activities so that all of the kids have a very positive experience and learn basic stick handling. There will be several coaches and small groups of kids for individual attention.

The sessions will be non-contact, although the boys will be required to wear regulation helmets and gloves and the girls regulation eye protection. There will be non-contact scrimmaging for both as the sessions progress. Cost of participation will be $125. That will include USLL membership for all players.

Registration and USLL forms will be available in the town hall outside the Recreation Department office starting Saturday, March 7th. Registrations are to be finalized by March 29th. All required forms must be submitted per the indicated address on the registration form in order to complete a registration. Additional information will be available in the town hall.

Cohasset recreation department South Shore Baseball Club

The Cohasset Recreation Department in conjunction with South Shore Baseball Camp will be providing and April Vacation Baseball Clinic, beginning Tuesday, April 22, through Friday April 25 at Barnes Field Complex.

The clinic runs from 12:00 noon to 2:30 p.m. and this week long program will cost $125 per participant.

For more information call the recreation office at (781) 383-4109. Registration forms can be found at the Recreation Office first floor, Town Hall.

You may register with a credit card by calling South Shore Baseball Club at 781-740-4382 or forms are available at the Cohasset Recreation Dept. at Cohasset Town Hall.

High School Basketball Notebook

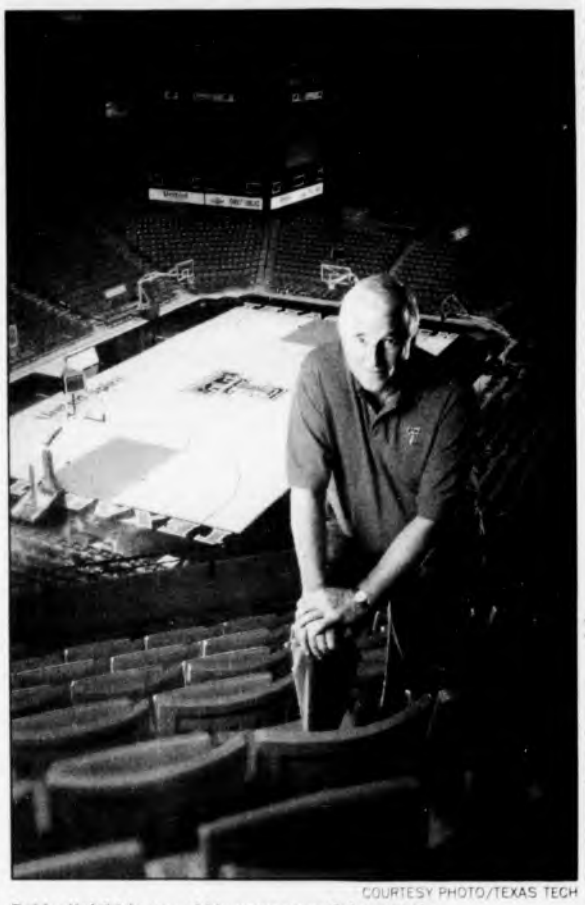
Bobby Knight, the polarizing men's basketball coach known as much for his loyalty to players as he is for throwing a folding chair, retired in early February. The unexpected resignation from the coach who won more games in college basketball than any other, left many inside and outside the college basketball world speculating his legacy.

We recently asked a few area high school basketball coaches a simple question. Would you want your son to play for Bobby Knight? Those who had sons answered with experience, those without answered the hypothetical.

Matt Poirier Scituate High School boys basketball coach: I read the book by Steve Alford and in the concluding paragraph he said yes, Steve Alford would have his son play for Bobby Knight.

Yeah I would. I know it would be more than basketball. I know practices would be hard but if you ever read anything about coach Knight he supports his team and his kids well after the fact and it's more than basketball to him. He wants the best for them when they are on the floor.

Bobby Knight does coach hard and there are some things about Bobby Knight that I think are really bad and ugly but in the long run the better aspects of him far outweigh the bad parts.



John Willis Norwell High School boys basketball coach: Yes I would. I know there are some controversial things about coach Knight in the past and today he runs a disciplined program but he cares about his kids although it might not come off that way. He has his style and it might not be one people can handle but honestly I wouldn't have a problem with it.

Dorian Bryant Cohasset High School boys basketball coach: Absolutely. I am a huge Bobby Knight fan. I have all of his books and I appreciate what he has done for the game. If I ever had a son that was good enough to play for a Bobby Knight or a John Chaney (Temple) I would definitely let them coach my son. I don't think there is a better teacher in life. He makes boys into men.

He is a very honest person and if you want to get better as a player you have to be told where you are weak and where to get better and he will tell you. Has he done things in the past? Yeah. But I tend to like those type of coaches, if you can take the criticism and do something better with it that's a good thing.

Paul Wholey Pembroke High School boys basketball coach: Yeah I would. From all the people that played for him over the years if they could abide by his rules and discipline they usually came out better people. His kids graduate and go to class they are student athletes. Bobby Huggins (Cincinnati, Kansas State, West Virginia) never had a kid graduate college. But the kid does have to be the right kind of person. When one of my sons went to college he played for a guy that was very similar to (Knight). I wouldn't tell my son not to.

We know there are many bright, talented and caring young adults in our communities, and this year, a special section entitled "The Best & The Brightest" will appear in the COHASSET MARINER to celebrate their accomplishments.

Please help us find these remarkable teens and young adults by filling out the nomination form on this page. You can nominate an individual between the ages of 16 and 21 who, you believe, deserves to be honored, whether it be for academic achievement, volunteerism, athletics, artistic acumen or the pursuit of excellence in another field. Here's your opportunity to get involved.

You can bring the form to the Community Newspaper Company office at 182 Standish Ave., Plymouth, MA 02360 or mail the form to Beth Doyle, or fax the form to 508-591-6601.

All entries will be considered by a selection panel, and successful nominees will be interviewed and photographed. During the week of May 26th, Community Newspaper Company will include "The Best & The Brightest," a special section devoted to sharing as many of the stories and photographs of those nominated as possible.

Back into the swing of things

LIFE AT CHS

CHRISTINE KENT

Unfortunately, over the break some seniors seemed to contract more serious cases of "senioritis."

"Welcome Back!" The many sun and snow kissed students of CHS re-entered the beige school halls this week (much to their chagrin) after taking a short one-week hiatus for February vacation. Though tired and sometimes sunburned, students and teachers alike eased back into the old swing of things, tackling homework assignments, essays, and quizzes…nothing new here!

Unfortunately, over the break some seniors seemed to contract more serious cases of "senioritis." It won't be long before the sweet sounds of Michelle Branch's "Goodbye to You" and Vitamin C's " Graduation" are blasting from the stereos. Given that they have only a few more months before departing from CHS, it appears that this time off furthered their desire to "focus" on anything other than schoolwork. No need to despair, we are simply saving our energy and mental strength for college next year!

In other news, two varsity sports, Boys Hockey and Girls Basketball, competed on Wednesday in their state tournaments. Cohasset's very own "Mighty Ducks" faced off against Westwood, passing the puck at the arena in Kingston. Luckily for our Girls Basketball, their number two ranking allowed for their game versus Bishop Connolly to be played on home turf. For more details, I recommend turning to the sports page!

Tired of lose change weighing you down or fed up with the clinking of those seemingly useless pennies? Why not drop them off in the designated boxes in either the High School office or 8th-grade English teacher, Ms. Crimmins' room. The 8th-grade fundraiser is called Pennies for Peace, a cause that supports schooling for kids in Pakistan and Afghanistan (for more info check out the website at www.penniesforpeace.org). Help give other kids their chance to receive a better education by donating. Make a difference!

Now, for the week's top stories:

- Monday, Feb. 25: A slow day back from break.
- Tuesday, Feb. 26: The Jazz Ensemble met to practice and create beautiful music!
- Wednesday, Feb. 27: CHS' star athletes for winter sports put their skills to the test competing in tournaments. Academically, the new members of the National Honor Society met after school to discuss their future plans in the NHS. The action-packed day continued with Mr. Willis and his debate team's intense match up against New Bedford.
- Thursday, Feb. 28: The Yearbook Committee reunited and continued their efforts to capture the essence of this year on every page!
- Friday, Feb. 29: Happy Birthday to all the Leap Year babies!

That's it for me, have safe and exciting weekend! On behalf of The Spinnaker staff, we would like to say congrats to the winners of the "Are You Smarter Than A Middle Schooler" quiz. 7th- graders Robbie Hillman and Andrew Leighton won free Spinnaker Staff shirts for their achievement.

Christine Kent is a senior at CHS. Her column appears weekly in the Mariner..

PAC workshop on organizing skills

Back by popular demand, all are welcome to join the Parent Advisory Council for a presentation of "From Direction to Done," by Sarah Ward, at 7 p.m., Tuesday, March 4, in the auditorium of Cohasset High School at 143 Pond St.

The workshop is helpful for parents of all students, especially for those that struggle with organization. Sarah Ward will provide parents with strategies they can use in order for children to self regulate, initiate, organize and finish tasks at home and school. The focus will be on how to improve a child's executive function skills. Sarah is a speech pathologist specializing in cognition and attention. She teaches her clients organizational behaviors and then helps them generalize those behaviors in real life.

All workshops and presentations are free and sponsored by the Cohasset PSO/Parent Advisory Council. If you would like to be added to their e-mail network for updates, forward your contact information to southshorepac@comcast.net.

Teen center dance

There will be a Midnight Blue dance for Cohasset children in grades 6 to 8 on Friday evening, March 7, from 7 to 10 p.m. Dances are $5 per person and you will be required to show your student ID when you sign in for the dance.

Make sure you are able to gain admittance to the dance before your ride leaves as once filled to capacity, no further admittance can be allowed. There will be no admittance in any case after 8:30 p.m. for dances. Snacks and refreshments will be on sale.

This is not a school function.

'Be magnificent' at Maxime

Salon gives new meaning to style

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Picture this scene: men and women relaxing around a table drinking wine or cappuccino and enjoying good food and conversation.

But this isn't your usual gathering of friends at someone's home or at a local restaurant. It's a hair-coloring session at Maxime (meaning "be magnificent" in Hebrew) Salon at 1 Derby St. in South Hingham.

This popular team-based salon with a cosmopolitan flair recently celebrated its first year in Hingham after moving from Norwell. Maxime's customers come from all over the South Shore and beyond.

"I love people and have always been fascinated by their life stories and accomplishments," said owner Ronit Enos, a Scituate resident. "I wanted to open a salon that not only provides the space and people to create new and amazing looks but also one where we can share stories and information and socialize and enjoy each other's company – a space where we could also enjoy good food and music and host interesting events, fashion shows, and workshops."

The space was designed with a large dining table around which customers and the colorist team sit as color is applied. On evenings and Saturdays, the 53 South restaurant delivers "white-glove" food. There are also peanuts and cookies for those who just want a snack. "They are our guests – men and women together talking like old friends," Enos said. "It's like a night out. It's entertainment." Others choose to bring along their laptops so they can get some work done while they wait.

"A lot of men get their hair colored here," Enos said. "We use a special technique that takes only half an hour and then they're off!"

The physical space, with its sleek SoHo-like ambience, was designed with New York City and Italian salons as inspiration – brilliant light, comfortable seating, fresh flowers, porcelain floors, beautiful color bar and sinks, and a lively color table where treatments are applied while customers converse.

"I wanted to bring sophistication to the suburbs," Enos said. "I wanted to create a place where my guests would feel as though they were in a very chic salon with an upper-East-side quality."

All-white palette

While many salons have walls painted in beautiful colors, Maxime was designed in an all-white palette. "That's because the color of the walls affects the color on the hair, which results in reflections that make it tough to discern the true shade you're putting on a head," Enos said.

Accordingly, the floors are non-staining, white Italian tile and the color bar and shampoo bowls are white. Color application is done out in the open at the long table rather than at individual stations.

"Our physical space is complemented by our awesome team of stylists and colorists who work with a common passion for beauty and fashion," Enos said. "We love working together to produce beautiful transformations for our customers."

The internationally trained stylists work by design to create updated and fashion-forward styles. Techniques consist of advanced cutting and styling methods, including scissoring, razor work and dry and precision cutting.

"Our stylists are patient and artistic and take the time to review products and styling methods with each client to ensure they go home feeling confident that they can successfully achieve their new style on their own," Enos said. "Our staff and customers share the same passion for looking good and feeling great."

All the services offered at Maxime are tailored to color-treated hair so that a cut is enhanced by the right color design. The salon offers everything from intricate highlights to lustrous glazes.

"Our training program gives our staff the confidence to stand in front of our very educated guests and tell them with 100 percent certainty that this will or will not work for you and this is why," Enos said.

She and her staff create customized programs allowing each guest to choose the amount of maintenance time and money they want to devote to their "transformation."

Enos believes that using coloring products from several manufacturers ensures that clients get the best there is to offer. "It's like being a chef. We use it all. It can get expensive, but it's the best way to color hair," she said.

Ronit Enos goes over coloring plans with Julie Wetherbee of Saugas, who was at Maxime to get highlights done. Techniques at Maxime also consist of advanced cutting and styling methods, including scissoring, razor work and dry and precision cutting.

Ronit Enos, who is sitting at her coloring consultant table in her salon, says the physical space at Maxime is complemented by an awesome team of stylists and colorists who work with a common passion for beauty and fashion.

STAFF PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

Ronit Enos also sells Kabala jewelry that promotes harmony and peace around the world. Words like good health, love, and peace are carved in these pieces in ancient Hebrew.

Move a success

The move from Norwell has been successful not only because the salon's business has doubled, but also because it has received numerous accolades. Maxime was named "2007 Best of the New" by The Boston Globe Magazine and received its fifth "Best of Boston" award from Boston Magazine.

Enos is quick to share the praise. "I couldn't do it without my team and husband, Bill," she said. "They are all so incredibly talented."

The challenge, she said, is "to always be on top of fashion" because today's consumer is so well-educated. "Our inspiration for hair is the silver screen, celebrities, and what models look like on the runway."

Enos has an interesting background. As a young girl in her home country of Israel, she had a great interest in beauty and fashion. "But the most intriguing piece to me was hair color and what it can do for an individual," she said.

At the age of 14 she embarked upon what was to become a lifelong passion for "all things beautiful" by working at a local hair salon. There she learned the intricacies of hair color.

After graduating from high school, Enos temporarily put aside her aspirations in order to serve a mandatory two-year military service requirement in the Israeli army as a combat trainer.

"I gained confidence from that experience and learned how to listen and appreciate people for who they are," she said.

Once Enos' time in the Army was up, she returned immediately to the beauty and fashion world.

Her career has taken her all over the world, where she studied at such famous schools as the Vidal Sassoon Academy in London and L'Oreal in Paris.

Transformation

"I love seeing the transformations that take place in such a brief time. In only three short hours, blondes look more glamorous, beautiful brunettes take on warm tones, and a dark-haired woman can become a vivid, lively redhead," Enos said. "It's satisfying to witness the physical results but even more rewarding to know that the customer feels great about herself. It's a magnificent feeling."

Enos moved to Scituate a number of years ago with her husband to raise their two children, Gabrielle and Will, now 17 and 16, and to pursue her dream of opening a salon. Enos worked at several local salons and trained and educated stylists in advanced techniques. She also assisted in launching two businesses, both of which are now successful beauty salons, before opening her own a number of years ago.

After six years in Norwell, Enos moved Maxime to its new, airy space in Hingham, where the approach is warm and personal.

Kerry Perkins has been a loyal Maxime customer for several years. "I think Ronit had a vision in terms of the salon she wanted to create, and she certainly has realized that vision," she said. "The salon is an inviting and comfortable space. I always look forward to what I know will be a relaxing experience. Every member of the staff is professional and has an upbeat attitude. I always leave feeling pampered and with a style that I can easily manage at home!"

The salon is primarily for adults, although some customers bring their preteens and teenagers in for special cuts or styles.

Maxime recently began a charitable partnership with Medicine for Humanity, an international health/relief organization with ties to the South Shore. Maxime donates $1 from every service it provides to clients to MFH. In countries served my MFH, even $5 a day can make a difference, Enos said.

She also has plans to launch an academy at Maxime in the near future, offering advanced training for stylists and colorists.

As if that weren't enough, a new line of natural, mineral-based makeup, b.yoffi (meaning "be beautiful" in Hebrew) was recently unveiled at the salon.

Makeup classes for teens are also offered. "At first the girls are shy, but they love it in the end," Enos said. "It's not so much about being beautiful but about loving themselves." Each teen leaves with a photograph of the "new me" taken by Maxime's own photographer.

concepts, said Middle-High School Principal Joel Antolini. The technology course links together concepts and gives students practical skills, answering the question often asked of math and science teachers, "when am I ever going to have to know this?"

The lab has 10 modules each with a different focus. Under the guidance of Young, the students follow instructions that lead them through the activities.

Through the class, the students learn the practical application of the technology concepts. They make a robot name "Cye" move across the room by typing into a computer. They make flyers and brochures using Microsoft Publisher. They turn plastic pellets into golf tees and create a picture frame with thermoset plastic.

"I try to teach the kids that many of the things they have, they can make. They don't have to buy everything," says Young, showing a CD holder as an example.

Two cars are ready for take off. The cars each have CO2 cartridges that when activated will launch the cars.

With her thumb on the trigger, Makayla Barrow waits to receive the signal before launching her car.

The stations instruct on flight technology, structural engineering, materials processing, research and development, electricity, robotics, mechanism, computer graphics and animation, computer assisted drawing (CAD) and virtual architecture.

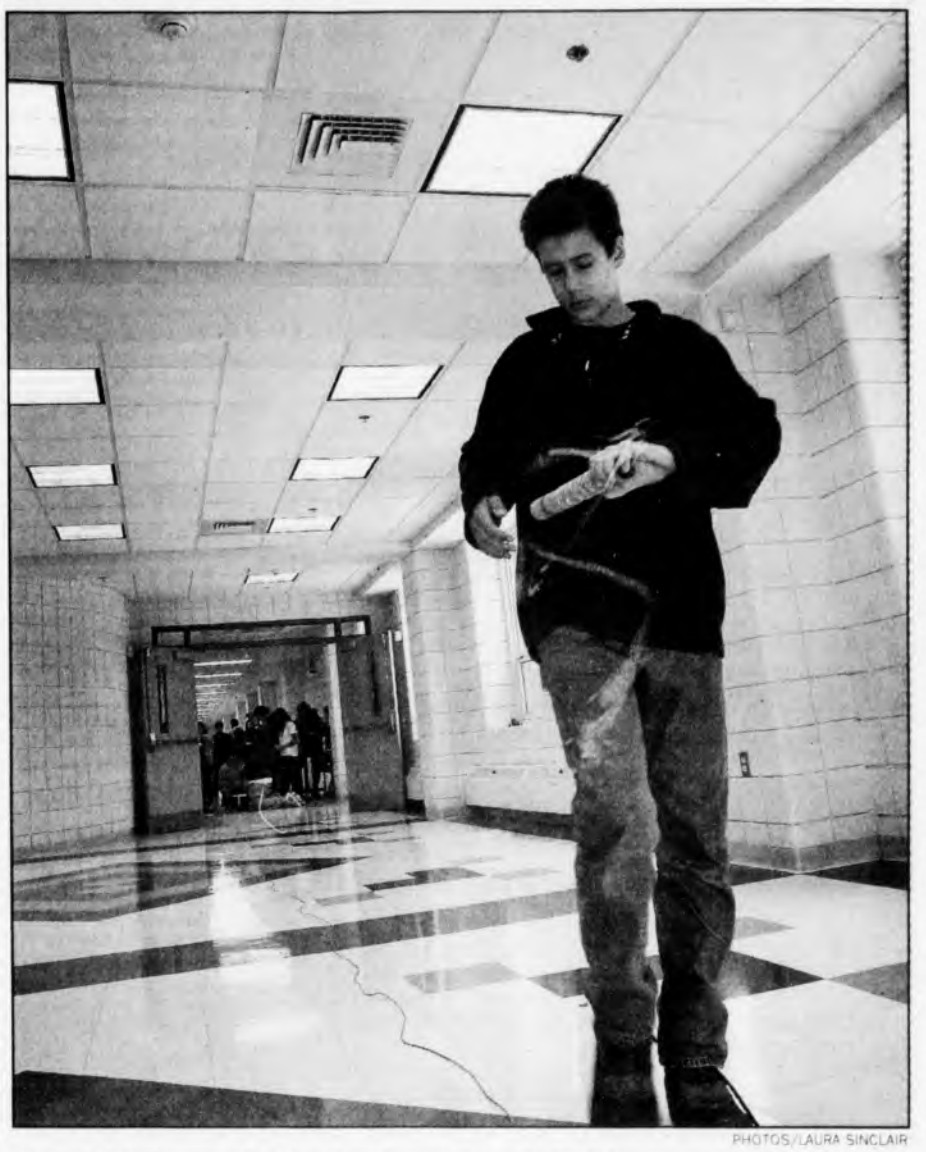
The students work in pairs or threes so there is a bit of teamwork and collaboration necessary. Students work together to design a home from the foundation up using the same type of computer programs architects and engineers use. At the research and development station, students build their own CO2 powered racecar, learning about drag and aerodynamics. trying to make them as aerodynamic as possible.

"Nothing is done the first time, everything is refined," said Young. The students test their model then tweak it on their prototype. Young says it teaches the kids to explore solutions and assess the results.

While the focus in creating a foundation and understanding in technology, Young said of equal importance is to be able to communicate and apply those ideas. Accordingly, each station includes a narrative assignment where students must provide a solution to a given problem applying the knowledge they've gained.

"It's not enough to know it, you have to be able to communicate it," said Young, "you can have the world's greatest gizmo, but if you can't communicate what it does you're not going to be able to do as well."

Being able to articulate ideas and concepts successfully is a skill needed on the MCAS.



With questions on technology and engineering popping up on the eighth grade MCAS, this addition to the Middle School curriculum is one that keeps Cohasset students competitive. But, this is only a side benefit.

"It's not as important that students test well but rather explore the activities embedded in the applications, linking together the subjects," said Antolini.

Each student in the middle school grades is currently enrolled in one trimester a year in the technology lab, but Antolini says the school is looking to make the class a year-round requirement creating even more opportunity for linkages to be made between the core subjects of math and science to technology.

Teacher, David Young, and student Colin Bell watch as two of the cars are launched. Principal Joel Antolini is in the background looking on. Students built their own CO2 powered racecar, trying to make them as aerodynamic as possible.

Thomas Gilliatt runs a nylon line along the corridor to the finish line as part of the preparation for the car races at the middle school Thursday. Each car is hooked into the line to keep it from spinning out of control.

"We're trying to build technology literacy."

Bringing a pre-engineering program to the high school is also being explored, said Antolini. While the middle school lab teaches the fundamentals and basics of engineering and exposes the students to different areas of technology, a high school program would be require more advanced thinking.

"It would stress the importance of independent thinking and problem solving," said Antolini. The program may not necessarily require a computer lab like the one at the middle school.

The PSO and CEF both found the technology lab a worthwhile endeavor for the school and its students.

"Engineering is something covered on the MCAS but it's also something students are interested in and of growing importance in education," said Isabel Blackburn, president of the PSO. They funded the lab in two parts giving a total of $37,500.

"It's going to help the curriculum in so many ways," said Blackburn.

After funding the first five modules of the engineering lab, the PSO turned to the newly re-energized CEF for additional financial support.

"It was a joint collaboration, it wouldn't have happened without the support of the other," said Mary McGoldrick, CEF board member and chair of the grant committee. The CEF felt the technology lab fulfilled many aspects of their mission statement.

Jimmy Lydon loops some nylon line through one of the cars before putting it in place for take off. The line keeps the car from going out of control. The metal protruding from the car is the CO2 cartridge that will propel the car forward.

"It was in innovative project, a program that has enduring value and impacts a good portion of students. The lab fit the bill," said McGoldrick. The curriculum-based project offers an increased opportunity for students to get a working knowledge of science, math, engineering and technology, she said. The CEF matched the PSO's grant of $37,500.

"We have to thank the parents and people in the community who made the donations to the PSO and the CEF that made the lab possible," said Antolini.

An open house will be held for parents and families to see what the technology and engineering lab is all about on Wednesday, March 5 from 6 to 7p.m.

The Rev. Margot Critchfield

St. Stephens welcomes Rev. Margot Critchfield

St. Stephens Episcopal Church, for the first time in 23 years, has called a new rector, truly a cause for celebration. The parish welcomes the Rev. Margot Critchfield to St. Stephen's as the new rector. Rev. Critchfield was most recently senior assistant rector at St. Albans Episcopal Church in Washington, D.C. She just arrived in town with her husband, Don, daughter, Grace, and their dog, Max.

Rev. Critchfield will celebrate her first service on Sunday, March 2. Everyone in the community is invited to attend and welcome her to the parish. Services take place at 8 and 10 a.m. Children's religious education is provided during the 10 a.m. service. Coffee and conversation in Walton Rodgers Hall, adjacent to the church, follows the 10 a.m. service. St. Stephens is at 16 Highland Ave.

St. Joseph Retreat Center schedule of events

St. Joseph Retreat Center, 339 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset, is hosting the following upcoming programs:

• Feb. 29 through March 2, At-Home Retreat. Make a retreat in the midst of one's lived reality and come to St. Joseph Retreat Center each day for a 45-minute individual meeting to share prayer.

• March 7 through 9, "Behold Your Life." Lenten retreat weekend to rest, reflect and journal with memories.

• Wednesday, March 12, Morning of Prayer, "Do Not Be Afraid."

• March 20 through 23, Triduum Retreat from Holy Thursday to Easter Sunday.

For more information and to register, visit csjretreatcenter or call or call 781-383-6024.

Worship Guide

Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St. 781-383-0808. Interim Pastor: Richard Chamberlain; Please join us for Sunday Service and Sunday School at 10 a.m. followed by fellowship in Merritt Hall. Accepting donations of new socks for homeless shelters and non-perishable food items for local food pantries.

Bible Study series continues on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Practical Christianity. Some Christians commonly view the Old Testament as a storybook-full of fascinating tales, yet ancient and irrelevant to modern reality. This exceptional 10-week study from Insight For Living with Chuck Swindoll will help you blow the dust off these timeworn chronicles and discover enduring truths that relate directly to you, while translating into reliable patterns for godly living. Experience familiar passages as never before, and find fresh inspiration in the memorable scenes revisited. Follow the examples of faithful Old Testament heroes such as Abraham, Joseph, David, and many others as you learn to apply timeless biblical principles to your everyday life. Please join us.

Our mission statement is: "Equipping God's people for living out the Good News to be the hands, feet, voice and heart of Christ in our community and in the world." How should we accomplish this? Come hear sermons to find out.

First Parish Unitarian Universalist on Cohasset Common, 23 North Main St. (Parish House). 781-383-1100. www.firstparishcohasset.org Minister: the Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull. Interim Director of Religious Education: Jim FitzGerald. Music Director: Allegra Martin. Interim Organists: Carolyn Bates and Maureen Hague. Parish Administrator: Sandy Bailey. Parish Committee Chair: Mary Parker.

We welcome all to our inclusive spiritual community. We affirm our Unitarian Universalist Principles and put them into action by worshiping together, caring for one another, and working for a safe, just, and sustainable world.

Sunday, March 2

8 a.m. - Circle Ministry in the Parish House/Atkinson Room - Group led by Joan Kovach & Susan Meikleham and meeting 1st & 3rd Sundays)

10 a.m. – Worship in the Meeting House – "When Stewardship Grows Within Us" - Guest minister, Rev. Bob Thayer - Stewardship Sunday

Religious education classes for toddlers, children and youth and childcare for our youngest begin at 10 AM in the Parish House.

Noon – 2:30 p.m. – Soul Work: Conversations across Congregations – Second Parish UU - 685 Main Street in Hingham!

Come whether or not you've participated before and whether or not you've read the chapter.

Begun a year ago on Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Sunday, we undertake the work of anti-racism as spiritual practice through respectful dialogue. Lunch is available at noon, and we convene for conversation from 12:30 to 2:30 PM. Our discussions are based on Soul Work: anti-racist theologies in dialogue. We'll focus on the essay, "The Paradox of Racial Oppression," by Rev. Dr. Thandeka, Senior Research Professor at Meadville Lombard Theological School. This series is dedicated to the late Rev. Marjorie Bowens-Wheatley, Friend, Mentor, and co-editor of Soul Work.

All are welcome as we worship and learn and live our faith together! To learn more about First Parish Unitarian Universalist, please come by the Parish House and pick up or sign up for the current monthly newsletter, The Common, or visit our website at www.firstparishcohasset.org or contact Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull, Minister, at 781-383-1100.

Snow scenes

White blanket covers Cohasset

Tony Emanuello, custodian for Second Congregational Church, cleans out the front section of the church parking lot Saturday morning (Feb. 23).

Georgia Barrett, 3, pulls her little sister Tess, 1, along in a sled in front of the Pratt Library. The girls were with family members during a sledding outing.

Five-year-old Gabe Barrett and his Mom, Melissa, head down the hill on the family's snow tube Saturday (Feb. 23) in front of the Pratt Library. The seven inches of snow that fell across much of the South Shore the day before promoted great sledding for all ages.

The snow that fell from last Friday's storm (Feb. 22) left a tranquil scene across Cohasset's Harbor Saturday morning. Here the Miss Judy awaits better weather to cast off.

Storm clouds begin to clear over a cold Cohasset Harbor Saturday morning (Feb. 23) from the snowstorm that left 7 inches of snow across the South Shore. The Cohasset Yacht Club is in the background.

Snow flurries fall while Liz Bowling walks along Sandy Beach with her friend Scout after last week's snowstorm.

The railing of the Cohasset Yacht Club frames a wintry harbor scene Saturday after Friday's snowstorm left seven inches.

Last Friday's snowstorm left this dinghy snow covered in Cohasset Harbor. Residents spent the day cleaning up walkways and driveways, while others enjoyed the snow and scenery.

Five-year-old Jack Wipf and Gabe Barrett, also 5, get a push from Paul Barrett down the hill on a snow tube in front of the Pratt Library.

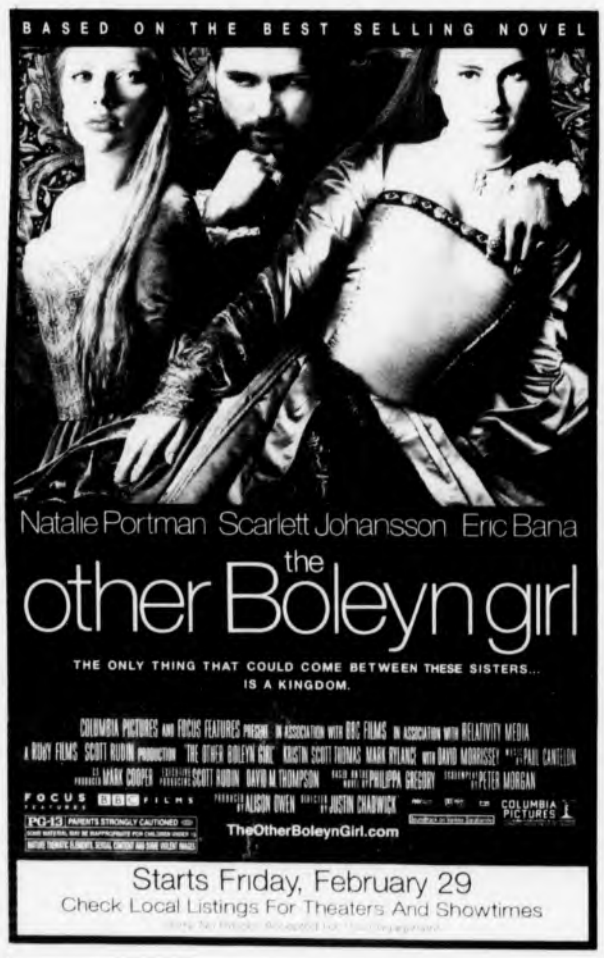
POLICE STATUS REPORT



Police arrested six last month

January was a fairly busy month for the Cohasset Police Department; there were six arrests, two for unarmed robbery, one for assault to murder, one for operating under the influence of liquor, one for an outstanding warrant, and finally, one for protective custody, Chief James Hussey said.

During the month of January, the police department investigated 15 motor vehicle accidents, four of which resulted in personal injury. There were 51 motor vehicle citations issued, totaling $170 in fines. Additionally, there were 32 parking tickets issued, totaling $800 in fines.

Also in the month of January, the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 734 calls for police services, of those 208 were Emergency 911 calls, Hussey said.

In the month of January, there was one report of breaking and entering involving a business. Also in January there were eight criminal complaints for the month.

Horoscope

SALOME'S STARS FOR RELEASE WEEK OF FEB. 17, 2008

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Stop being the wool-gathering Lamb, and start turning that dream project into reality. You have the ideas, the drive and the charisma to persuade others to follow your lead. So do it.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) You've scored some big successes. But remember that all hardworking Ferdinands and Ferdinandas need some time to restore their energies and refresh their spirits.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) You're gaining a stronger mental image of what you're trying to achieve. Now look for the facts that will help get this to develop from a concept into a solid proposal.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Some of you eager-to-please Moon Children might want to delay some decisions until midweek, when you can again think more with your head than your heart.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) A new business venture seems to offer everything you've been looking for. But be careful that that rosy picture doesn't betray traces of red ink under the surface.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) A volatile situation needs the kind of thoughtful and considerate care you can provide right now. There'll be plenty of time later to analyze what might have gone wrong.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Your loyalty to a friend in a tough situation earns you respect from people you care about. Those who criticize you don't understand what friendship is all about.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Your strong work ethic is rewarded with the kind of challenging opportunity you love to tackle. Now, go ahead and celebrate with family and/or close friends.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A legal matter you thought had been finally resolved could require a second look. But don't make any moves without consulting your lawyer.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Taking charge is what you like to do, and since you do it so well, expect to be asked to lead a special group. This could open an exciting new vista for you.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) An important matter might wind up being entrusted to you for handling. The responsibility is heavy, but you'll have support from people able and eager to help.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A spouse or partner might make an important, even life-changing, suggestion. Consider it carefully. It could hold some of the answers you've both been looking for.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

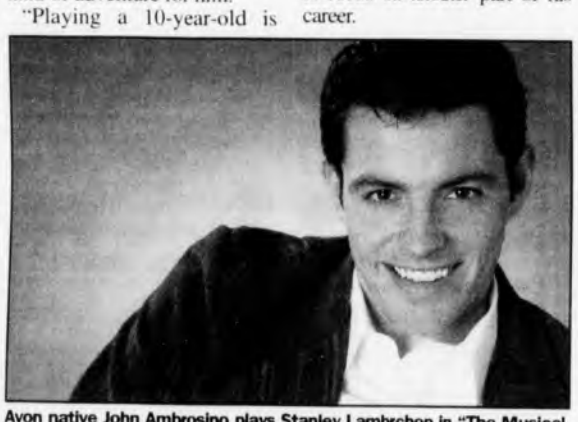
Flat Stanley comes to life on stage

Local actor shows kids the world in musical

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Unlike most actors, Avon native John Ambrosino doesn't mind at all when audiences describe his performance as one-dimensional.

In fact, that is exactly what he hopes they'll say when they see him as the title character in "The Musical Adventures of Flat Stanley," which comes to Boston's Colonial Theatre next week. Ambrosino plays Stanley Lambchop, a typical little boy whose life changes one day when he wakes up flat.



"This kid has ambitions that go well beyond his everyday life," Ambrosino explained by telephone last week from Kansas. "So, when his bulletin board falls on him and flattens him in his sleep Stanley sees it as an opportunity. He arranges to have himself mailed all around the world so he can have all kinds of different experiences and adventures."

Ambrosino acknowledges that portraying such a young character represents its own kind of adventure for him.

"Playing a 10-year-old is quite an experience for me as a 28-year-old," Ambrosino said. "A 10-year old boy now is so different than when I was 10 years old. They carry themselves so differently and seem so much wiser than I remember being at 10."

The actor's own childhood was spent in Avon where his mother, Joyce Ambrosino, still lives, and in Scituate during the summer months. A 1997 graduate of Braintree's Thayer Academy, Ambrosino earned a bachelor's degree in theater from Bates College in Lewiston, Maine, in 2001. After college, he returned to the Boston area to found Animus Ensemble, a Boston Center for the Arts-based theater company where he directed nine productions including "The Baltimore Waltz," "Once Upon a Mattress," and "Promises, Promises," which earned him an Independent Reviewers of New England (IRNE) nomination as Best Director.

After spending six years as co-artistic director for Animus, Ambrosino decided it was time to focus on another part of his career.

Avon native John Ambrosino plays Stanley Lambrchop in "The Musical Adventures of Flat Stanley" at the Colonial Theater March 7-9.

The cast of "The Musical Adventures of Flat Stanley."

"In the last two years, I decided I wanted to act again and not just be a director," Ambrosino said. "I just knew that I needed to go back to acting."

It was that ambition that led him to his first national tour in the musical about the little boy who has the ultimate study abroad experience – being stamped, posted and canceled all the way from Washington, D.C., to France, Mexico, China, and Russia – as he pursues his dream of once again becoming a three-dimensional boy. Based on the children's book series by Jeff Brown, with illustrations by Scott Nash, "The Musical Adventures of Flat Stanley" features a book by Timothy A. McDonald and music and lyrics by Bryan Louiselle and McDonald. Under the direction of McDonald, the stage show grew not only out of the popularity of the books, but also Flat Stanley's more recent move into the realm of cultural icon with an appearance on "The Oprah Winfrey Show," a visit to the White House with current President George W. Bush and cameos on "ER" and the now-defunct "The West Wing." These appearances stemmed from "The Flat Stanley Project," in which schoolchildren initiated worldwide pen-pal relationships by mailing copies of the character to other youngsters around the globe.

"Before I took this role, I didn't know much about Flat Stanley, although I had seen the photo of him with Condoleeza Rice," says Ambrosino, who makes his home in Boston's Downtown Crossing with his husband, designer Kory Kolligian. "I even turned down this role initially. The more I learned about it, however, the more I wanted to do the show."

Ambrosino admits his knowledge of his character has come more from the creative team on the stage adaptation than from Brown's original source material.

"This musical is based on the book, but it is still far different from the original story," Ambrosino said. "Tim McDonald goes in very different directions with this story than Jeff Brown did in his first book. My inspiration in playing this character has come from the music written for this show."

And from enthusiastic young audiences that have been on hand at every stop so far on the national tour.

"The first couple of performances we gave in front of 2,000 children were wild," Ambrosino said. "Children use their own imaginations to really enjoy these characters. They find humor in all kinds of things, too, which is wonderful. And there is nothing like our curtain calls. When the lights go out and 2,000 kids are screaming, it is an amazing experience which demonstrates that our audiences really believe in us."

Helping inspire that belief is some creative costuming by Theresa Squire that has Ambrosino's Stanley passing for a pancake.

"I wear a suit that, when I'm turned sideways, gives the illusion that I'm flat," Ambrosino said. "I studied Bunraku classical puppetry in school and it has really helped me play Flat Stanley. Wearing this costume is almost like a form of puppetry, because it changes the way you walk and move. The flat suit is made of foam, which is lightweight, but not incredibly comfortable. I love making the costume come alive for the kids who see our show."

Some of who have their own ideas about how to help Stanley.

"The kids in our audience are just wonderful," Ambrosino said. "One young boy raised his hand at the end of the show. When we called on him, he let us know that he knew how to restore Stanley to three-dimensionality. Another time, a little girl down front in the orchestra was following along in her picture book with everything that was happening on stage. It was so sweet to see her so taken with the story."

"The Musical Adventures of Flat Stanley" will be at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston, March 7-9, for six performances only. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at flatstanleyboston.com.

Pond issue is draining

Controversy headed for Town Meeting

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Most residents probably don't know where Treat's Pond is on a map, but an article concerning its restoration is shaping up to be one of the most controversial articles on the Town Meeting warrant.

The Monday night Board of Selectmen's meeting had nearly two hours of discussion from a vocal audience that brought many questions, concerns, as well as support, to the topic of Treat's Pond and its possible restoration to a saltwater marsh. Treat's Pond is located on the ocean side of Atlantic Avenue near Whitehead Road.

At the close of the discussion with no deliberation among them, the Selectmen voted 3-0 to add specifics to the Treat's Pond article (article 22). Selectman Ralph Dormitzer recused himself from voting as he resides near Treat's Pond, but spoke at the meeting as a private citizen. Selectman Fred Koed was absent.

Town Meeting will be asked to allocate or borrow funds of up to $300,000 to partially match a $728,000 congressional appropriation. If the article passes at Town Meeting, it authorizes the Selectmen to acquire by purchase, gift

Cancer survivor takes on Boston Marathon

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

At the beginning of a marathon a runner knows he has a long way ahead of him — 26.2 miles to be exact. When Kevin McKeon takes to the starting line of the Boston Marathon he just might be thinking he has more than a long run ahead of him.

"With all I've been through I want to do whatever I can to help fight cancer."
— Kevin McKeon,
two-time cancer survivor

Cohasset's Kevin McKeon, a two-time cancer survivor, is running the Boston Marathon as part of the Dana-Farber Cancer Team to raise money for cancer research.

At age 36, the Cohasset resident has battled and survived cancer twice. He's running the Boston Marathon as part of the Dana-Farber Cancer Team to raise money for cancer research.

"With all I've been through I want to do whatever I can to help fight cancer," said McKeon.

In August 2005, McKeon was diagnosed with thyroid cancer, "it was a difficult time for me and my family." But, he says the experience only prepared him for the worst news that came next just five months later. Shortly after completing treatment for the thyroid cancer, he was diagnosed with a malignant brain tumor.

McKeon underwent six and half weeks of radiation and 14 months of chemotherapy, which he completed in May 2007. During his treatment, he began to look for ways to prevent the brain tumor from returning and also wanted to find ways to help others who were fighting cancer.

"I told myself it I can get through this I'd do something," says McKeon. He's making good on his promise by embarking on the marathon fundraising venture and on a more personal level, overhauling his diet and lifestyle.

He and his wife Diane combed through nutrition books and medical studies and found the survival rates for some forms of cancer have shown to be higher in people with healthy diets and active lifestyles.

One book in particular has helped in the transition, McKeon says he lives by the principles described in Monica Reinagel's "The Inflammation-Free Diet Plan".

Monday's agenda Selectmen meeting

The Board of Selectmen will devote its Monday, March 10 meeting to finalizing the Town Warrant and reviewing articles they have yet to make a recommendation on. The warrant is scheduled to go to the printer by the end of next week. The Town Meeting warrant must be mailed to all homes at least two weeks before Town Meeting.

Annual Town Meeting is scheduled to begin at 9a.m. on Saturday, March 29.

Capital Stabilization supported fund

The Board of Selectmen supported a Town Meeting article to create and fund a Capital Stabilization Fund. The fund will be created for the purpose of funding various capital improvements, capital projects and/or capital equipment for the town departments.

Town Manager Bill Griffin recommended the stabilization fund be initially funded by two $125,000 allocations for a total of $250,000. Griffin recommended the roll-off amount coming from the town's non-excluded debt service schedule for fiscal 2009 be transferred to the account at the start of the fiscal year, July (a total of $125,000), as well as a $125,000 allocation from free cash.

Transfer of funds into the stabilization fund and transfers out of the stabilization fund will require a two-thirds vote at Town Meeting.

"There's real control at Town Meeting," said Griffin.

POLICE BEAT

Two arrested in shoplifting scheme

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An alert employee from a local pharmacy reported two males acting suspiciously on March 1 in and around Tedeschi Plaza on Route 3A, police said. As a result of this call, Cohasset Police officers stopped two men and discovered that they were allegedly involved in a shoplifting scheme, where they would enter a store, make a small purchase and proceed to steal other items from the business.

Arrested was Raymond C. Fuschetti III, 40, 45 Winter St., Weymouth. Fuschetti was charged with larceny over $250; shoplifting by asportation over $100; and receiving stolen property. Fuschetti was also found to have an outstanding arrest warrant from Attleboro District Court for operating a motor vehicle with a revoked driver's license.

Also arrested was Kenneth J. Peters, 44, 50 Federal St., Weymouth. Peters was charged with unlawful possession of Class B, C and E narcotics; receiving stolen property.

Police said both men were in possession of more than $2,000 worth of merchandise from different stores located through the South Shore and Metro Boston areas. Officers from Cohasset Police Department are working with detectives from local area police departments and loss prevention representatives from local retail stores to return some of the suspected stolen goods to owners.

Chief James Hussey said police appreciated the help provided by an alert citizen in this case.

"An alert citizen contacted the police," he said. "After an investigation, we were able to identify and arrest a couple of suspects.

"We are now in the process of potentially solving some similar situations in surrounding towns," Hussey said.

Forgery

A Cohasset man is facing charges of forgery of a check, uttering a false check and larceny of property over $250 following an investigation by police in conjunction with Bank of America.

After an earlier FBI and IRS investigation, Joseph A. Yerardi, 46, of 91 Nichols Road, formerly of Newton, was placed in federal custody for engaging in a scheme with John. J. Toyias, 42, of Waltham, to divert income from their businesses to their personal benefit without reporting that income to the Internal Revenue Service, according to the U.S. Attorney's Office. Yerardi, who was also accused of tax evasion, was sentenced to 30 months in prison, followed by three years of supervised release and was ordered to pay restitution and a fine.

Chief James Hussey said Bank of America corporate security asked Cohasset police for assistance after determining the bank had a forged check that was deposited in a business account.

Cohasset police will seek the complaints as a result of their investigation.

Disorderly conduct

A 43-year-old Cohasset man is facing charges of disorderly conduct, assault, resisting arrest and failure to stop for police officers after he allegedly sent his dogs after the officers, police said.

The incident took root at about 9:10 a.m. on Tuesday (Feb. 26), when a caller reported a man was yelling profanities at him in the village. Officers searched for the small white vehicle the man was driving. Later, at 11:47 a.m., the subject returned and continued to yell racial slurs, according to the caller. This time police had a plate number and determined the subject lived on South Main Street. The officers found the car and followed it. Police said the car sped up when the cruiser lights were activated. The man pulled into his driveway, quickly ran into the house and yelled to his dogs to attack. Several small-sized dogs came at the officers and started biting at their legs.

About 10 minutes later, the man opened the door. He was yelling and behaving in an unruly fashion, police said. Police took him into custody. He was released from court later that day and police told him to stay away from the village area.

Police said the caller, who was the subject of the suspect's ranting, did not even know the man.

Stolen tires, rims

A set of tires and rims, valued at $2500 were stolen off a 2008 Nissan at a local car dealership sometime overnight Wednesday into Thursday morning (Feb. 27-28), police said. The theft was reported by an employee when he arrived at work. Detectives were called to the scene and the incident remains under investigation.

Marijuana arrest

At 10:30 a.m. last Friday (Feb. 29) an officer observed a gray Mercedes pass multiple cars in a no-passing zone on Route 3A. The officer got behind the car at 3A and Red Fox Lane and followed it, pulling it over at the Mobil Mart. The officer saw the passenger moving around inside the car. When the woman driver opened the window, the officer could smell alcohol. The officer told the passenger to stop moving around when he put his hand between the seat and the console. As it turned out, he had a small plastic bag of marijuana in his hand.

Based on the officer's investigation and observations at the scene, both the driver and passenger were taken into custody. The 24-year-old Scituate woman, who was driving, was charged with possession of Class D (marijuana), marked lanes violation and passing violation. The 26-year-old passenger, also from Scituate, was charged with possession of Class D.

The passenger had been drinking, but there were no criminal offenses for alcohol, police said.

Uninsured car

Police are summonsing a 23-year-old Weymouth man to court for driving an uninsured car and for not having a front license plate following a traffic stop at 1:10 a.m., Saturday (March 1).

The officer who was on patrol saw a 1996 Chevy Lumina parked on South Main near Beach Street in a manner that it was slightly blocking the travel lane. The officer pulled behind the vehicle to see if the occupants needed assistance and saw a man and woman in the back seat. The man said he was lost and pulled over because he was tired. The officer asked for his license and ran the plate that showed the car was uninsured.

Both people were brought to the station and the car was towed.

Deer carcasses

Anyone who would like to pick up a deer after it has been killed by a car should contact Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy at 781-383-1055 (extension 1014) to be put on a list. Some people would like the venison, Murphy said.

BOLO issued

Police issued a BOLO (Be On the Look Out) to area towns after a Jerusalem Road woman reported that 10 minutes earlier she had arrived home from the grocery store to find a silver/gold car in her driveway with two suspicious men inside. She provided a description of the two men and reported that when they saw her approach, they backed out and one of the men (the passenger) covered his face as they drove away. Chief Hussey said police did not have a plate number or direction of travel and could not find anyone in the area fitting the description. The incident remains under investigation.

The incident occurred about 11:15 a.m. on Tuesday (Feb. 26).

Suspicious activity

Police followed up on a complaint last week about two suspicious youths wandering around the MBTA parking lot, "looking like they were up to something." When officers arrived the youths had left the area. Police checked the cars and did not find anything unusual. The call came in at 3:10 p.m. on Monday (Feb. 25).

Medical issue

Police conducted a welfare check on a Hull woman who was slumped over, inside her car that was parked on South Main Street in the village last Thursday (Feb. 28). The woman, who had just had surgery and was on medication, appeared to be passed out. She had pulled over in a legal parking spot. Police took her to the station and helped her make contact with family or a friend who could help her get home.

Former Pacini's locale looking for new tenant

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's been Chinese, Mexican and Italian, but what next for the Route 3A restaurant?

After Pacini's Italian Eatery closed about two months ago, the owners of the property have been actively looking for a new restaurant to fill the space next to the Dunkin' Donuts.

Michael Tack, a representative for the Nauset Group, which owns the site, is hoping to find the right restaurant operator for the site.

"We're committed to the location," said Tack in a phone interview. "We love the town, it's a great location. We're hoping to find the right combination and the right formula to capitalize on the location."

He has teamed up with the Atlantic Restaurant Group to find the right restaurant concept.

"We're not rushing, we want to find the right match" and a restaurant that will stick around more than a year or two, said Tack. "I know when the right restaurant is there, it will thrive."

The Nauset Group purchased the former KoKo Island site as well as an adjacent building, which once housed a hair salon. The hair salon space was transformed into a Dunkin' Donuts with a drive-thru while the KoKo Island site underwent significant renovations. Since the Nauset Group purchased the property, the restaurant space has been two restaurants: first, Aculpulcos Mexican restaurant and most recently, Pacini's Italian Eatery. Tack said both restaurant owners were really great people but for whatever reason were unable to find the right niche in Cohasset.

"We're hoping to find the right combination and the right formula to capitalize on the location."
— Michael Tack, Nauset Group

The right restaurant for Tack is an eatery with broad appeal among all ages, "a restaurant with a pub atmosphere that is appropriate for kids, teens, families and adults. Everybody wants a good restaurant with reasonable prices," said Tack.

A more relaxed, family-oriented restaurant is what is needed in town and on the property, said Tack. He is hoping to get a restaurant operator who will take full advantage of the "summer vibe" Cohasset offers as well as the influx of people to Cohasset for every South Shore Music Circus concert.

"It would be great to have a place people could go to eat after a concert" or watch a game, or meet up with friends, said Tack. He is currently talking to some restaurant operators who are interested in the site and hopes to get a restaurant in there soon.

Regardless of changes on the restaurant side of the building, Tack said residents can rest easy they will be able to get their Dunkin' Donuts fix every morning.

Saltmarsh restoration of Treat's Pond on table for Town Meeting or eminent domain easements to carry out the project. Four lots near Whitehead Road would be affected. The article will need a two-thirds vote at Town Meeting.

Before the discussion was opened up to the crowded room of neighbors, abutters and interested citizens, a motion was put on the table by the Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil and seconded by Selectman Paul Carlson to add to the article's wording the amount of funding and affected parcels. The Board had previously voted to recommend the article to Town Meeting.

The complicated project has many layers, including the taking of land to construct a new outfall pipe to the outer harbor for the pond and whether the project will solve the flooding problems plaguing the homes around Treat's Pond. Other issues were more straightforward with residents asking the Selectmen if a large sum of money should be spent in this area before other severe flooding is addressed.

The Treat's Pond issue initially came before the Selectmen during two meetings over the summer. David Larsen, Army Corps of Engineers project manager, presented their preliminary study and possible methods of restoring Treat's Pond to its "historic state" as a saltwater marsh. During the course of the meeting several residents called in to question whether Treat's was ever a salt marsh, arguing it has historically been a fresh water habitat.

Even before the summer meetings, the Treat's Pond restoration project had been in the works for a couple of years. Federal funding of $270,000 allowed the Army Corps of Engineers to begin studying the area and engineering a solution for the troubled wetland.

Larsen said the town is not obligated to match any portion of the initial $270,000 appropriation as the town has yet to sign a project cooperation agreement.

Ultimately 35 percent of funding has to the come from non-federal sources, primarily municipal and state funds. The Town has requested state Rep. Garrett Bradley to seek up to $500,000 from state sources. A current estimate for the construction of the project is $1.7 million.

Although the primary goal of the Army Corps is saltwater marsh restoration, the pond is located in an area prone to flooding and stormwater problems. Proponents of the project as well as the Board of Selectmen are looking for the project to deliver some alleviation to flooding problems.

Amo Houghton, an abutter to Treat's Pond and proponent of the article, pointed out the financial benefit to using the federal money to address the flooding issue on Atlantic Avenue.

"It will be as good a return on investment as I've ever seen," said Houghton. He added if the opportunity is not seized "the whole responsibility and cost is going to be on the shoulders of the town to solve the flooding problems."

Although most agreed there needed to be some resolution for the flooding issues plaguing Atlantic Avenue, there were some who questioned whether this project would resolve the flooding problems.

"We know there isn't a lot of money to go around in town, we really need to set priorities," said Karen Quigley of 27 Clay Spring Road, "we need to take a deep breath and determine what we could do in the short term to help alleviate the flooding problems for the least amount of money."

She said she spoke with a contact at the Army Corps who told her the federal funds do not have a time limit in which they must be spent; Larsen could not confirm whether that was true.

Quigley asked if Larsen could provide significant assurances the marsh restoration project would fix the flooding problems.

"The most frequent rain events will be non-issues, but there will always be some threshold events," Larsen said.

Ralph Dormitzer speaking from the audience as a private citizen described how the water ended up in Treat's Pond and surrounding property during rain events. The water comes down from the high ground starting at Mohawk Way and Beach Street to the west side of Atlantic Avenue. The water then enters catch basins that go under the street and empty into people's yards.

"The flooding problem is in fact exacerbated by how these drains have been created, the development of the land and the fact there is ledge," said Dormitzer.

Others were concerned whether the town was appropriately prioritizing flooding issue, which are widespread throughout town.

Joe Coggins of 57 Elm St., an abutter to Jacob's Meadow, weighed in on behalf on the stormwater issues affecting his neighborhood. He felt the Jacob's Meadow flooding issues coupled with the Wastewater Treatment Plant overflows were a bigger issue.

"In a perfect world we'd have all the money for solving flooding and stormwater problems, but we don't live in a perfect world," said Coggins. "Money is very tight...the flooding situation surrounding a wastewater treatment plant that has a history of overflows should take priority over any flooding problems."

Vanderweil said steps are being taken to address the Jacob's Meadow flooding. Funds were allocated at the fall Town Meeting for a town-wide flood control master plan and engineering for the outlet connecting the meadow to the harbor. However, Coggins said those items don't solve the problems upstream from the meadow that contribute to the flooding issues and more money will be needed down the line.

"It's a serious problem, a problem that's not going to go away. No matter what happens that water is flooding down from that high ground. It's got to be addresses some way or another," said Ralph Dormitzer,. "You may agree with this project or you may not but that doesn't say this group of people does not have a right to do something associated with a drainage system that simply pushes all the water into private yard."

Pipe to outer harbor

In its initial studies the Army Corps of Engineers found several options to restore the pond, some they said worked better than others, but ultimately it was up to the town to determine the best method. At a recent meeting, there was consensus among the Selectmen to advocate for the outer harbor outfall pipe. Preliminary plans take the pipe through Whale Meadow and other private property near Whitehead Road.

A 42-inch inside diameter pipe will be installed from Treat's Pond to the outer harbor to connect the pond to the ocean and create tidal exchange, said David Larsen, Army Corps project manager. Larsen said with adequate tidal exchange eight times per month a visible transformation would take place at Treat's Pond. The end of the outfall pipe will be close to the low water mark emptying almost into the channel, said Larsen.

"We feel a transformation from a low value freshwater phragmite-ridden ecosystem to a high value saltwater ecosystem is a benefit both regionally and nationally," said Larsen.

At this point in the project Larsen said the plan is only conceptual, but to install the pipe easements will need to be given, purchased or taken by eminent domain on four different parcels listed on Assessor's Map 31 (parcels 10, 11, 12, 22). An environmental assessment study has yet to be done on the impacts of installing the pipe in the area. The price estimate of $1.7 million is based on the Army Corps experience and the conceptual plan, Larsen said.

Right now, there is a pipe that runs from Treat's Pond to Sandy Cove to allow for one-way exchange from pond to ocean. With constantly shifting sand, the pipe routinely gets covered and Treat's is unable to drain, exacerbating the flooding around the pond. After major storm events the DPW uncovers the pipe to allow Treat's Pond to drain.

Some opponents to the project expressed concerns with the Army Corps plan in that it creates an exchange that did not exist before.

"What's proposed could cause irreparable damage to the environment," said Peter Whittemore of 47 Elm Court and a property owner near Sandy Cove. He feared by creating a tidal exchange salt water would be able to flood Treat's Pond and the surrounding area with saltwater, "we're creating an exchange that's never been there."

Whittemore urged the Selectmen to consider other alternatives, explaining he knew the current pipe worked when it was kept clear.

"These aren't easy problems to solve with a pipe to somewhere else," said Whittemore.

Eminent domain issues

To complete the project, the town and Army Corps will need the cooperation of several property owners. Attorneys representing those property owners said at the meeting and through correspondence with the town easements will be difficult to obtain.

On behalf of her clients, property owners Helen Chapell and Millicent Thayer, attorney Teresa Belmonte of Hemenway and Barnes relayed their opposition to the restoration project.

"Our clients feel that there are less intrusive and more cost effective alternatives to having a new culvert originating at Treat's Pond, or a connected pond, pass through their land," she stated. "Accordingly, Mrs. Chapell and Ms. Thayer are not willing to grant an easement on any portion of their property."

Attorney Rich Henderson representing another Whitehead Road property owner, the Ralstons, said his clients had similar feelings.

"There is no legal justification for taking land," Henderson said, adding if the town goes through with this they will face opposition "so vigorous, so repellant, we won't see the end of it in our lifetimes."

When discussion had nearly reached a two-hour mark, Vanderweil brought the public comment to a close. Between the three voting Selectmen (Ted Carr, Paul Carlson and Vanderweil) there was no discussion or debate on the issues raised during the course of the night.

"There are only three of us but we might as well get a vote out so we have a direction," Vanderweil said. On other occasions, the Selectmen have waited for Selectman Fred Koed (who was absent from the meeting) to weigh in and vote but the motion proceeded to a unanimous 3-0 vote.

When reached by phone Vanderweil said Treat's Pond was not a new issue to come before the board and not much new came out of the discussion.

"Both sides, the proponents and opponents had been (before the Selectmen) two other times over the summer," said Vanderweil about the lack of debate among the board. "The main driving force for me and I believe the Board of Selectmen is the flood control issue."

Vanderweil said time constraints as Town Meeting looms closer propelled him to call the issue to a vote, "we wanted to get it done in time for the warrant."

The Town Meeting warrant goes to press next week.

AdCom has questions

The Advisory Committee heard a presentation on the Treat's Pond restoration project article Tuesday night, but has not taken a position on it. Advisory Committee Chairman Sam Wakeman said the committee has some questions regarding the article including where is Town's $300,000 coming from, the eminent domain taking issues and a deed restriction limiting what can be done to Treat's Pond under review by Town Counsel.

Abutter pushes for staging area move

Town's compliance with procurement laws questioned

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Little Harbor water and sewer project staging area on Jerusalem Road is back in the spotlight. Just a few weeks after the Zoning Board of Appeals made its decision to deny an appeal of the staging area's residential location, a neighbor is looking for a solution from the Board of Selectmen.

Paula Becker of 185 Jerusalem Road spoke as an unofficial representative of the objecting abutters to the staging area. Becker requested the town move the site out of the residentially zoned district into a commercially zoned, town owned or other location for the remainder of the project.

"I am here to express my utter frustration, anger and disappointment regarding the placement of the commercial entity, the staging area for the Little Harbor Sewer Project, in a residential neighborhood at 198 Jerusalem Road," said Becker.

Becker said the town never offered the residential neighborhood the opportunity to be heard before locating the "commercial entity" on Jerusalem Road. Further, she indicated she has experienced a lack of adequate response and accountability on behalf of the town when she was looking for information about the staging area. While the ZBA's recent decision affirmed the town has control over the staging area, and therefore is allowed under the zoning bylaws, Becker said her experience has shown her the town does not have control.

Becker pointed to the fact she has been unable to be provided with an executed, unredacted copy of the contract between the property owners (the Jenkins family) and LM Holdings, the town's contractor for the Little Harbor sewer and water project. Becker argued if the town had operational and legal control of the staging area they should be able to produce an executed copy of the contract.

"I am here to tell you that this issue is about due process rights, landowner rights, and taxpayer's rights," said Becker. "As residents, we should not have to be paying attorneys to enforce laws that already exist to protect us. As landowners, we have been blindsides by the naïf belief that he Town of Cohasset, its officials and Commissions would act, on their own, to abide by and enforce existing laws and protect residents property and due process rights.

Becker said the town might have saved money by locating the staging area on Jerusalem Road, but "(the) cost savings can never justify the infringement of our property and due process rights.

"The bottom line is the Beckers just want the site gone," said Sewer Commission Chairman Sean Cunning, but affirmed the town has the right to pull the plug at a moment's notice. He offered several ideas to minimize the visual impacts of the site including moving the construction trailer to the rear of the property, reducing the amount of inventory on the site and installing green mesh on the chain link fence.

The Selectmen voted 3-1 to have the Sewer and Water Commissions develop a list (in writing) of other possible locations and analyze the consequences of each. Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil was the dissenting vote. The Selectmen requested the commissions come back before them with their report at a meeting immediately following Town Meeting (March 29).

"I am here to tell you that this issue is about due process rights, landowner rights, and taxpayer's rights."
— Paula Becker, 198 Jerusalem Road

Procurement issues

Becker requested the town address concerns relayed by the state Office of the Inspector General relating to possible violations in procurement laws by the town over the staging area.

"By definition and according to the opinion of the Inspector General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the Town of Cohasset violated the state procurement statute (Chapter 30-B) which required public contracts over $25,000 to be put to open bid," said Becker.

Under Chapter 30-B, or the Uniform Procurement Act, procedures for local governments to use in contracting for supplies, services, and real property.

"Obviously we want to comply with all laws and we will make all efforts to be in compliance," said Chairman Gary Vanderweil, but added he was not a lawyer and didn't understand the ins and outs of the law.

Town Manager Bill Griffin explained the original agreement between the contractor and the Jenkinses was a license agreement, a less formal than either an acquisition of a property or the lease of a property. Under Chapter 30B, a town needs to undertake a public procurement process for an acquisition or lease of property but does not need to a license.

"The Inspector General agrees with (the town) that the original license between the contractor and the Jenkinses does not require compliance with Chapter 30B," said Griffin. However, when the Town and other parties executed a "Memorandum of Agreement" clarifying both the license agreement for the land and the contractor's general contract to state the town maintains legal and operational control of the property, there is a gray area.

"It may have turned the license agreement into the equivalent of a lease," said Griffin. Town Counsel consulted with the Inspector General, who Griffin said emphasized that the views of the Inspector General were advisory in nature only.

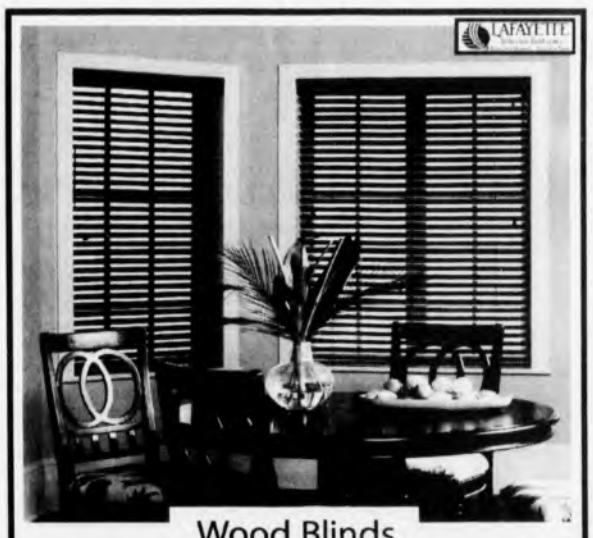
"The Town wants there to be no question that it is in compliance with the law," said Griffin and Town Counsel is currently reviewing what options exist to address the concerns of the Inspector General.

Zoning hearing tackles four articles

A public hearing on the four zoning bylaw amendments coming forward at Town Meeting; the Planning Board made recommendations on three of the four bylaws put forth on the Town Meeting warrant.

• Article 14 creates a bylaw for a wind energy conversion facility, or a wind turbine. The bylaw sets regulations for large, commercial grade wind turbines. In addition to minor grammatical changes, an amendment was made to relax the setback requirements in commercial districts. With the change, in residential districts the amount of setback from other neighboring properties must be greater than or equal to the height of the wind turbine structure. In commercial districts, the setback will not be a requirement of the bylaw but will be taken into consideration by a Planning Board review.

The Alternative Energy Committee has been working to bring this bylaw forth for over a year. The Planning Board recommended the bylaw in a 3-0 vote (Planning Board Chairman Al Moore and member Bob Sturdy were not present at the meeting).



• Article 15 seeks to amend the zoning bylaw table of use regulation to make wind turbines in an allowable use by special permit to be issued by the Planning Board. With little discussion, the Planning Board voted 3-0 to recommend the article.

• Article 16 would make the Planning Board the special permit granting authority for all applications in the village business district. Under the current zoning bylaw, the Zoning Board of Appeals has the authority to grant special permits for proposed changes on non-conforming parcels in the village business district. For all other lots, the Planning Board is the special permit granting authority. This change to the bylaws would bring all applications for changes within the village business district before the Planning Board for approval. The Planning Board voted 3-0 to recommend the article.

• Article 20 amends the town's inclusionary zoning bylaw, a regulation that mandates affordable housing is a part of larger projects with multiple units. An inclusionary bylaw currently exists, but this proposed bylaw expands on what is in the books now. The Planning Board did not vote on a recommendation for the inclusionary bylaw, but did continue the public hearing until Monday, March 10.

Following the public hearing, the Housing Partnership Committee determined at its meeting Wednesday night the bylaw was not ready for the primetime at Town Meeting. Chairman Tom Callahan said issues raised at various board and committee meetings needed to be addressed and another version of the bylaw would come forward in the fall.

ENGAGEMENT

Nicole Paige and Robert Arthur Stansell III

Fatica - Stansell

Mr. and Mrs. Jon Fatica of Riverside, Conn., announce the engagement of their daughter, Nicole Paige, to Robert Arthur Stansell III, son of Moira and Robert Stansell Jr. of Cohasset.

The bride-to-be graduated from Tulane University in New Orleans, La., and is a candidate for a master's degree in business administration from New York University. She is the Investor Relations Officer at Primus Guaranty, a credit derivatives company in New York City.

Her fiancé graduated from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y., with a bachelor's degree in architecture and a bachelor's degree in building science. He is a design architect with Perkins & Will in New York City.

A July wedding is planned in Greenwich, Conn.

Antique Appraisal Day returning to Cohasset

Skinner Inc. Appraisers are coming to Cohasset again for the second Antique Appraisal Day. Mark calendars for Saturday, March 29, to bring antiques to be appraised. For large pieces, several good photographs can be used by the appraiser. Be sure to include photos of any special markings, numbers or other details that may assist in the appraisal process.

This event is sponsored by the Friends of Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs and will take place at St. Anthony's Parish Center, 10 Summer St., Cohasset, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Appraisals are $10 per item, or $25 for three items. Excluded items include coins, stamps, jewelry and musical instruments. As people had to be turned away from the last appraisal day, a maximum of three items per individual will be allowed.

Snacks and refreshments will be available to enjoy while waiting to meet with the appraiser.

For more information, call Cohasset Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112 or John Campbell, president of the Friends at 617-909-5687.

Carling Sturino named to Golden Key

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

SPRING FORWARD

Hello Cohasset. What a great week of beautiful weather we have had. I hope that everyone has been able to take advantage of it as it looks like it is going to be a little bit cold again next week. Make sure to set ALL CLOCKS AHEAD when you go to bed on Saturday night, it seems a bit early to be doing this but it is all for the right reasons I am sure. A little darker in the morning but an extra hour of daylight at the end of the day will be so nice.

This is a bit awkward but I want to thank all who sent me get well soon messages and words of encouragement over the last week or so. I am home from the hospital and on the mend. I also want to send a HUGE thank you to the Cohasset Fire and Police on the help they gave tome and my family on Monday night of last week. I don't remember it myself but know from my family how much it meant to them to have such a caring and reliable group of people to get me to the hospital. We are so lucky to have such a great group of professionals within our town. THANK YOU!!!

COLLEGE HONORS

Carling Sturino received academic honors at Boston College by making the College's 1st Honors Dean's List for the Fall 2007 semester. A junior at Boston College, Carling is majoring in English. Carling has also accepted membership in Golden Key International Honour Society and was honored during a recent induction ceremony at Boston College. Golden Key International Honour Society is the premier college/university honor society in the world, with more than 1.7 million members and over 350 chapters in the United States, Australia, Canada, Malaysia, New Zealand, South Africa and the United Arab Emirates. Carling, you are doing so well, Cohasset is proud of you as your family and friends are as well. Keep up the nice work.

'JOSEPH'

Don't miss the chance to see the colorful and musical story of Joseph and his coat of many colors as told through the musical score and lyrics of Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber presented by the Cohasset Dramatic Club. Remaining dates for this show are March 7,8,14 and 15at 7:30 pm and March 9 and 16 at 2 pm at Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium. Tickets are$14, $12 groups of 8 or more and may be purchased ina dvance at Buttonwood Books, Front Street Books in Scituate, Paperscapes in Cohasset or by calling 617-697-2115. Tickets are also available at the door. This is such a great way to enjoy an evening with friends and/or family members with music, color and fun. See you there!

ON THE FARM

Warm weather is coming! Now is the time Cohasset's Holly Hill Farm prepares its spring educational programs. If you are interested in helping lead groups of elementary age schoolchildren through the various learning stations at the farm, please contact Friends Education Director Jon Belber at (781) 393-1455. Training will consist of learning the various components in the Friend's programs which aim at teaching students where our food comes from and many of the basic science principles that spring from an exposure to an active farm. Training will also emphasize some of the tricks of the trade involved in managing groups of 10 -12 youngsters in the outdoors and begins with an important introductory session at the farm at 236 Jerusalem Road. Volunteers may choose either a morning session on March 18 from 10-12 noon or and afternoon session on March 20 from 1-3 p.m. The next three, one-hour sessions are optional and are for those who want greater exposure to the Friends' curriculum. These will take place on March 25, March 27 and April1 with all sessions running from 10 – 11 or 11-noon.

Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc, now in its 6th year, is the non-profit educational component of Holly Hill Farm that sponsors collaborative programs with local schools and other youth organizations and also programs for children and their families after-school and during vacations.

FONTBONNE

Congratulations to Cohasset resident Emily St. John, grade 10, who earned Second Honors on Fontbonne Academy's Second Quarter Honor Roll. Fontbonne Academy is a Catholic, college-preparatory high school for young women in Milton.

FRENCH EXCHANGE

The French Department at Cohasset High School is now accepting applications for next year's exchange with the Lycee Christophe Colombe in Sucy-en-Brie, just outside of Paris. CHS students plan to host their French correspondents for two weeks in October 2008 and to be hosted by them in France for two weeks in February 2009. (Students who will be enrolled in French 4 or higher by Spring 2009 are eligible to apply. The projected cost is around $1500 per student and includes airfare, lodging, meals, transportation, and excursions.) If you are interested, please contact Mrs. Marat at the High School right away or e-mail bmarat@cohassetk12.org.

BENTLEY

Bentley College has recently named the following local students to the dean's list. They achieved outstanding academic achievement in the fall 2007 semester: Colby Durant, a junior majoring in management; Courtney Hurley, a junior majoring in business; Robert Meikleham, a freshmen majoring in finance; and Christina St. Pierre, a junior majoring in marketing. Congratulations.

CONN. COLLEGE

The following local students have been named to the dean's list for the 2007 fall semester for Connecticut College. Dean's High Honors was achieved by Sarah F. Noble, class of 2008. Sarah earned a grade point average of 3.7-4.0. Dean's Honors, a grade point average of at least 3.3 was achieved by Owen M Stevenson, class of 2011; Ashley M Faber, class of 2008; and Francis W Murray, class of 2011. Super work to you all.

APPRECIATION

An anonymous Cohasset resident had some much-needed work to their home in Cohasset in the Fall of 2006 and would like to thank the following people. Bob Gledhill for donating his crew to roof; Lynne & Robert Schwandt, owners of Graham Waste Services, for donating a dumpster; Bill Ketchum from Lowe's who got a great price for the roofing materials and also, all the organizations and individuals who contributed to this financially. It takes a village.

That is it for now. Send in all of your news and photos no later than Tuesdays by 5 pm. EMAIL: aroundtowncohasset@yahoo.com MAIL: P.O. Box 33, Cohasset, MA 02025

Committees meet at budget summit

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The fiscal 2009 budget is in its final stages. Less than a month before Town Meeting (March 29) the budget numbers are becoming clearer and all indications point to another year without an override vote.

On Thursday, Feb. 28, the Board of Selectmen, the School Committee and the Advisory Committee came together for a meeting of the minds to discuss the town-wide budget for the upcoming fiscal year — and begin to look even farther beyond that.

Both Town Manager Bill Griffin and Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh presented their portion of the budget to the committees. The school budget was presented with a 4.9 percent increase over this year's budget coming in at 14.358,893. The School Committee approved the final budget number of $14,316,397, or an increase of 4.6 percent at a public hearing Wednesday night (see related story).

Griffin updated his budget message of early January as numbers from the state and other previous unknowns have become firmer. The news was positive: the total increase in available funds over original projection is approximately $88,000.

The school budget overview touched on the major efforts the administration has made to streamline its operations in order to achieve a greater degree of efficiency as well as the indicators of progress over the last year.

Strong MCAS scores in grade 3 reading and math and grade 6 and 8 math, significant jumps in SAT mean scores, increased participation in AP testing and progress toward proficient/advanced MCAS scores district-wide were offered as examples of progress.

To begin to address areas not as strong, the proposed budget includes a math specialist shared between the two elementary schools, two new AP electives, foreign language classes for grade 6, reorganization of middle school staff to increase instructional time, and development of an in-house elementary level program for children with severe special needs.

Walsh said although strides were being made to run efficient schools, 75 percent of the budget is devoted to staff salaries locked in by the teacher's union contract.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer suggested the School Committee address the mounting salaries in the next contract negations beginning in the upcoming fiscal year. The teachers' union is under contract until June 2009.

"Attracting and retaining quality staff is my biggest problem," said Walsh and fears losing teachers if better salaries and benefits could be found in other towns.

Because cuts could come from few other line items in the budget, there was a huge benefit in addressing the issue, said Dormitzer

School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said both school budgets and town budgets are affected by collective bargaining that is above the Proposition 2-1/2 restrictions, "systematically we have a problem and as a town we have a problem."

Under a 26-year-old state law, dubbed Proposition 2-1/2, the annual increase in the local tax levy is limited to 2-1/2 percent with an allowance for new construction. All town union contracts, except the teachers' union, are due to expire on June 30, 2008.

Walsh also pointed out the schools' increasing reliance on fees, gifts, boosters, grants and tuitions which has jumped from 8.5 percent of the budget in fiscal 2006 to 11.1 percent, nearly $1.8 million, in the proposed budget.

On the town side, Griffin said many of the variables he outlined in his initial budget message had become solid numbers over the past few weeks. In the Governor's budget lottery aid was decreased, but replaced with the town's share of casino fees. However, along with town managers across the state, did not count on the town receiving the casino monies. The latest reports from the State House, said Griffin, were lottery aid was to be restored by the legislature, giving Cohasset approximately $63,000 in state aid previously not factored in. A projected increase in the South Shore Vocational assessment was too conservative and the town was assessed even less than last year, bringing a swing to the good of $20,409. In addition, there was an increase in state assessments of approximately $5,000 less than projected.

In total, there was an increase of $88,000 in available funds over original projections.

As a result, Griffin recommended returning $50,000 of the $92,496 reduction he originally recommended for the School Department budget and restoring $38,000 to the Department of Public Works budget to address identified needs such as vehicle fuels and street line painting.

"I personally feel we have made progress. If our good luck doesn't continue, you have to make your own luck to a certain extent," said School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn, "from an accountability and transparency standpoint we are in a much better state now than we were three or four years ago."

Override likely next year

All parties seemed to agree it is unlikely Cohasset would be able to put forth another level services budget for fiscal 2010.

Advisory Committee member Tucker Glavin called for the elected boards to really start looking beyond 12 months to the next three or four years and start preparing for the inevitable.

"The town is really waiting for the town to come together to look forward beyond 12 months," said Glavin. Instead of trying to keep going forward without an override, "we need to come together — these two boards — to be fiscally responsible."

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said the override needed to be framed in terms of identified and concrete town needs and priorities.

Advisory Committee Chairman Sam Wakeman agreed with Dormitzer, "we need to start educating the town about the town needs we are not able to afford right now. Voters need to be prepared rather than go into Town Meeting on an emotional yes or no."

Overrides allow voters to increase taxes above the limit of 2-1/2 percent set by the state to increase revenue to the town. No override was proposed last year, but the two years prior to that brought the override question to the ballot box. Both times the override failed.

"We're can't go another three or four years — unless we're cutting and not moving the town forward — without an override," said Flynn, "We have to figure out what we think and what we want to do the next few years. It shouldn't be any surprise where our numbers are."

School Committee member Steve Fusco suggested the boards come together again mid-year to begin strategic planning on the fiscal outlook for the next few years.

"We're all in this together," said Flynn, "thank you everyone for coming out."

School budget gets stamp of approval

$14.3 million budget recommended to Town Meeting

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The school department budget is ready for the primetime. Following a public hearing on the budget Wednesday night, the School Committee voted unanimously to approve a budget of $14,316,397 for fiscal 2009. The certified budget proposal will now go before Town Meeting and face voters' scrutiny on March 29th.

The budget is an increase of 4.6 percent, or $629,997 over the current fiscal year. Since school administrators unveiled their budget numbers in December discussions and changes have taken place to get to the final certified budget.

In December, the school department presented a working budget that included a 4.9 percent increase over last year's budget, or $14,358,893. Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh said then that the budget would be constantly evolving over the next two and a half months.

Town Manager Bill Griffin recommended a 4.24 percent increase in the schools budget at his budget presentation of early January. With some unknowns still in the budget from the state and other line items, he said the schools would be among the priorities for funding if money opened up in the budget.

"The difference between our budget and the town manager's budget was $91,000," said School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn.

Last week at a joint meeting of the School Committee, Advisory Committee and the Board of Selectmen, Griffin reported an additional $88,000 came into the budget (see related story).

There were two big changes over original projections. First, in the Governor's budget lottery aid was decreased, but replaced with casino fees. Griffin said reports from the State House were lottery aid would be restored, adding an additional $63,000 to the budget. Second, a projected increase in the South Shore Vocational assessment was too conservative and the town was assessed even less than last year, bringing a swing to the good of $20,409. In total, $88,000 more was available in the budget than previously thought.

Griffin recommended adding $50,000 more to the school budget and $38,000 to a strapped DPW budget.

With the additional $50,000 the school department was able to remove a few items in order to level the budget. The schools had planned to share the cost of a school resource office with police department, but Griffin was unable to fund the police's share. With that $25,000 item removed the remaining $15,000 was made up from various places in the budget.

Flynn said even with the decrease from the initially proposed budget, he was satisfied with the final numbers.

"It definitely moved us forward," said Flynn. The new Virtual High School program (initially funded by the Cohasset Education Foundation) would be able to continue this year. An additional math teacher would be added to the high school, the foreign language program would be extended to grade six and a shared Osgood/Deer Hill math specialist is incorporated to the budget. Efficiencies were created at the Middle School by changing the class format and maximizing teacher's time.

"It's a well thought out budget, especially in what could have been considered a lean year," said Flynn.

The committee members praised the administration for the budget, "this budget without an override supports the classroom and incorporates multiple efficiencies," said School Committee member Alfred Slanetz.

Walsh said while the school department was able to reorganize some structures and find efficiency this year, "we have to be honest, we can't keep doing that."

School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said the committee needed to keep looking at school's increasing reliance on outside revenue, especially fees charged to the families in the district.

"We still have a great portion of the budget being funded on the back of families in the school district," said MacCarthy. More than $1.7 million, or 11.1 percent, of the budget is supported by outside funding — fees, gifts, boosters, grants and tuitions.

The complete School Committee budget with line items is available online at the Cohasset Public Schools website www.cohassetk12.org.

Teen center dance

There will be a Midnight Blue dance for Cohasset children in grades 6 to 8 tonight (Friday) March 7, from 7 to 10 p.m. Dances are $5 per person and you will be required to show your student ID when you sign in for the dance.

Make sure you are able to gain admittance to the dance before your ride leaves as once filled to capacity, no further admittance can be allowed. There will be no admittance in any case after 8:30 p.m. for dances. Snacks and refreshments will be on sale.

This is not a school function.

Global relations

Cohasset resident named to international business committee

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Geographical boundaries no longer limit business transactions as nearly all major companies participate in a worldwide market place that seems to grow bigger — yet smaller — with each passing day. Even in Cohasset, there are ties to a larger world.

Recently, Cohasset resident Tanya Bodell was appointed to the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) Standing Committee of the International Centre for Expertise. In simplest terms, that means Bodell and nine other members from across the world help find experts to aid global companies in a variety of business matters.

"It is without a question an honor," said Bodell, who is serving as one of two vice chairs on the committee. "It's very exciting for me to be put back into the international arena."

Founded more than 30 years ago to facilitate international commercial relations, the ICC International Centre for Expertise provides access to experts who can assist with a range of business matters.

Expertise may be used in a variety of contexts including: removing uncertainty in business operations; mediating the amicable settlement of disputes; and assisting in connection with litigation or arbitration. The Centre relies on ten appointed members of its Standing Committee as well as more than 90 ICC national committees to assist with referring experts from around the world.

"...it's very exciting for me to be put back into the international arena."

— Tanya Bodell, Cohasset resident

With a busy life involving a full-time job, studying to receive her masters in business administration from MIT, and a husband and three kids under the age of five, Bodell has made room for this new responsibility in her calendar because "it's a perfect fit for me" in that it combines her talents and interests.

Her specialty is in the energy industry, including identifying the effects of government regulation on profit opportunities, particularly in the areas of competitive markets and environmental policy. She has provided expert support to companies involved in alternative dispute resolution proceedings and litigation for more than 14 years.

"It's great being able to package my experiences up and use them all at once," said Bodell of her role with the ICC committee. While she never imagined being a part of the ICC (she only found out about it last year when a colleague mentioned it to her and she researched it), she immediately was drawn to the opportunity.

She envisions the responsibilities will add up to one or two days per month and the duration of the appointment is three years. The ICC International Centre for Expertise meets twice a year in person and performs much of its function by e-mail communication. It fields roughly five requests for expertise in a month. After only being a committee for about a month, Bodell says the group is still trying to find their way as a committee.

"There's a lot of e-mail correspondence going back and forth," says Bodell, who also is vice president of CRA International, a worldwide company specializing in providing consulting services and economic and financial expertise.

Bodell brings a unique perspective to the committee, "I'm the only American, I believe I'm the youngest, and I'm the only woman."

The members of the committee come from various different business backgrounds and from different countries. The committee has a sitting member from every continent except Asia, but is considering finding an 11th member to fill that void.

STAFF PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

Tanya Bodell was recently appointed to the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) Standing Committee of the International Centre for Expertise.

The other members come from Chile, France, the UK, Lebanon, Egypt, Belgium and Poland. Each one has a different business background to bring to the table — an international lawyer, a metallurgy engineer, a finance expert, two geotechnical and civil engineers, a mechanical engineer, an economist, a civil engineer and an architect.

The committee brings its collective expertise and business contacts to act as a resource for global business. Often they are called on to assist when companies enter international arbitration or in a breach of contract situation, or in dispute resolution. The committee then finds an appropriate expert to provide expert testimony or opine on the situation.

"As globalization continues, I anticipate that there will be even greater demand for a neutral international forum where parties from different countries can resolve their disagreements in an efficient way," says Bodell.

A topic of early discussion within the committee, says Bodell, is how to build an electronic list of experts from all different fields and industries so participants can search and look for a fit for their specific case. Right now, a company contacts the standing committee to find an expert. Although the Centre for Expertise is the go-to place if international businesses need an expert to aid them in a dispute, currently there is no database to help the committee find an appropriate expert.

"The standing committee is looking at a way to make the centre more effective at fielding requests for expertise and to work with the ICC to provide these services," says Bodell.

"The Centre has an excellent reputation for providing qualified experts," says Bodell. Typically, the committee is able to refer an expert with whom they have one degree of separation and therefore personal knowledge of their abilities.

Despite her involvement on the global business scene, Bodell loves coming home to Cohasset. She and husband, Ted Carr, who is vice chair of the Board of Selectmen, have three children: Clayton, 4; Carrington "CeeCee," 3; and Clarissa "Chloe" 8 months.

They live on South Main Street, just outside the village.

"It's the perfect house for city people," she jokes. Her love for Cohasset was instant, even though they first visited on a "rainy, spitty day." They ate clam chowder at the Olde Salt House and "we fell in love with Cohasset."

When they came back to Cohasset on a beautiful sunny day, Bodell saw a boy about eight years old riding his bike down the street. Bodell looked around for a sign of the boy's parents — trained by her city lifestyle — when she realized in Cohasset, an eight-year-old boy would be perfectly safe riding his bike on his own.

"I said this is where I want to raise my children," says Bodell, "Ted and I plan on retiring here."

Tanya Bodell a working mother of three, holds onto her daughter Clarissa "Chloe" Carr, 8-1/2 months, before going on a business trip to Philadelphia.

Two-time cancer survivor takes on Boston Marathon

He's become really into the biology of how food and beverages interact within the body. He eats a mostly vegetarian diet, drinks a glass of red wine every day, a spinach salad with other vegetables for lunch and fish two times a week. He doesn't indulge in any refined carbohydrates or sugars, opting instead for whole grain bread and pasta.

While his co-workers make jokes about his eating habits, which varies only slightly from day to day, McKeon knows everything he is putting into his body is warding off another bout with cancer.

Coinciding with his diet changes, McKeon began to run regularly. McKeon says he hadn't been a serious runner in a number of years when he began building up his training last spring. He started by running three miles a day five days a week then over the course of the summer he added a few miles each week to his running regimen.

Kevin McKeon is framed by his mailbox while stretching out his Achilles tendon following a jog last Saturday. Kevin, together with the 550 runners on the Dana-Farber Challenge Team, hopes to raise $4.5 million for cancer research before marathon day April 21.

In the fall, the official Dana Farber Marathon Challenge Team program began which builds in mileage every week as the Boston Marathon gets closer and closer.

When committing to the Dana Farber Challenge Team, each runner must personally guarantee raising $3,000. McKeon set his fundraising goal at double that amount and has already surpassed his goal with $6500 in pledges.

"I've received donations from $20 to $1000, there's been a lot of generosity," said McKeon. Now, he hopes to raise just as much money as he possibly can.

"I've grown addicted to the fundraising," said McKeon, "cancer affects every family."

Every penny of the money raised goes to funding vital and cutting edge cancer research at the Claudia Adams Barr Program in Innovative Basic Cancer Research. According to its web site, the Barr program helps fund some of the most talented scientists with unique and promising ideas.

Together with the 550 runners on the Dana-Farber Challenge Team they hope to raise $4.5 million for cancer research before marathon day April 21.

He trains with other area members of the Dana-Farber team at local gyms. A two-time breast cancer survivor is on the team, "it's good to know there are others out there who have survived and are running."

McKeon has taken on Heartbreak Hill once before as an unofficial runner. At 24, he ran the 26.2-mile course from Hopkinton to Boylston Street in 4 hours and 12 minutes.

This time around, 12 years older and much wiser and as an official runner, he hopes to prove to himself he can do it faster — his goal time is four hours.

His family, including wife Diane and 4-year-old daughter, Ava, parents and aunts and uncles will cheer him on from the sidelines of the Boston Marathon. They plan on moving around the course strategically placing themselves to offer vocal support throughout the course.

McKeon still goes in for a brain MRI every four months to make sure the cancer has not returned, "I'm going to keep up the healthy lifestyle and hope it stays that way."

Search for new rec director underway

The search for a new recreation director is under way. The application deadline has passed and the town received about 30 resumes for the position. Town Manager Bill Griffin and Recreation Commission chairman Jim Richardson narrowed the field and invited six candidates in for an interview. Griffin said he plans to form an interview team and have the first round of interviews next week. The first round of interviews will not be open to the public. Griffin intends to have a final selection in place by the end of the month.

Cohasset's first and only Recreation Director Jack Worley announced his plans to retire in October after serving the town for 31 years. Worley's retirement will become effective on April 30, 2008.

West Corner culvert engineering

The Board of Selectmen endorsed the recommendation of the Capital Budget Committee to allocate $50,000 from free cash for engineering services relating to the replacement of the West Corner culvert and related work in the area. The West Corner culvert project is a joint effort between the towns of Hull, Hingham and Cohasset. A prior agreement stipulates Hull will pay for 50 percent of the engineering services while Hingham and Cohasset are responsible for 25 percent each.

Town Manager Bill Griffin stated in a memo to the Selectmen, the new engineering became necessary when the Massachusetts Highway Department, which is overseeing the construction portion of the project, needed to change several design elements. Furthermore, a decision was made to incorporate improvements to the intersection of Hull Street (Route 228), Jerusalem Road, and Rockland Street as well as address drainage problems on Hull Street (Route 228) at the intersection of Grace Drive.

The cost of $2.4 million project is coming from the 2008 Transportation Improvement Plan with the assistance of state Rep. Garrett Bradley.

"The design will result in the receipt of $2,400,000 in construction funds to improve the structural integrity of the West Corner Bridger (built in 1908), and significantly improve water quality in Straits Pond, reduce nuisance vegetation and midges through tidal exchange," stated Griffin in the memo.

So far, this allocation is the only one recommended by the Capital Budget Committee for capital improvement for this Town Meeting cycle.

Message from the Advisory Committee

Members accept the responsibility to be a liaison to all the elected and appointed boards and committees, as well as Town departments.

As we approach the time for the Annual Town Meeting for Cohasset, to be held this year on Saturday, March 29, the Advisory Committee would like to introduce itself to the citizens of Cohasset and to explain our purposes and procedures. We are appointed by the Troika, a three-person committee that consists of the Moderator, the Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, and the Chairman of the Advisory Committee. The nine members of the Cohasset Advisory Committee serve for staggered three-year terms.

The charge to the Advisory Committee is to review all articles in the Warrant for any Town Meeting and to report in writing to the Town Meeting our opinions and recommendations. We meet with the various committees and boards and citizens who have proposed articles for the Warrant. We meet with the Town Manager to hear his Fiscal Budget message for the upcoming year. Members accept the responsibility to be a liaison to all the elected and appointed boards and committees, as well as Town departments. Our intent is to have at least two members who develop a thorough understanding of the operations of the various boards, committees, and departments.

We meet at least weekly in the months leading up to Town Meetings. We attempt to develop a comprehensive and balanced opinion about each Warrant article. Our recommendations usually appear in the Warrant that is mailed to every household with at least one voter. Occasionally the committee isn't able to make a recommendation in time to meet the printer's deadline for the Warrant.

At Town Meeting, a member of the Advisory Committee, speaking for the entire committee, will make a statement to the meeting, which not only gives our recommendation for action on the article, but also includes our various points of view, concerns and opinions.

We encourage the voters to keep us informed with substantive information about the Warrant articles. Our meetings are posted and open to the public.

Sam Wakeman, Chairman
Pat Waters, Vice-Chairman
Chartis Tebbetts, Secretary
Members: Vivien Bobo, Merle Brown, Jamie Gilman, Tucker Glavin, Roger Hill, and Ed Lappen

WEEKLY MEETINGS

The following meetings are posted at Town Hall:

Advisory Committee, March 11, 7 p.m.
Board of Health, March 19, 7 p.m.
Conservation Commssion, March 20, and April 3, 7 p.m.
Economic Development Committee, March 12, 19 & 26 at 7:15 p.m.
Historical Commission, March 12, 7:30 p.m.
Planning Board, March 10, 6:45 p.m.
Recreation Commission, March 12, 6:30 p.m.
Selectmen, March 10, 17 & 24 at 7 p.m.
Sewer Commission, March 24, 6 p.m.
Water Commission, March 18, 6 p.m. at the King Street plant.
Zoning Board of Appeals, April 1, 7:30 p.m.

All meetings take place at Town Hall unless otherwise noted. Call the Town Clerk's office at 781-383-4100 for updates and additions.

Remarks reportedly picked up on TV

Some viewers of the televised Board of Selectmen meeting told the Mariner that Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil conferred with fellow Selectmen toward the close of the meeting Monday night. Vanderweil's remarks were not heard in the meeting room. But reportedly, the television microphones picked up Vanderweil telling Selectmen Paul Carlson and Ted Carr he was going to stop discussion and they would proceed to a vote. The Mariner was in attendance at the meeting and unable to watch the televised meeting.

When reached by phone this week, Vanderweil said he did talk to the other Selectmen about "logistics" of when to close discussion on Treat's Pond at the meeting.

"I don't want to unilaterally control the meetings," said Vanderweil and wanted to make sure the other Selectmen were in agreement the discussion was ready to come to a close

The Mariner believes for committee members to move away from the microphone to discuss an issue or logistics about the conduct of the meeting among themselves so that those in attendance are not privy to the discussion is a violation of the Open Meeting Law.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Diversity Committee seeks more community involvement

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Diversity Committee would like to thank the many residents of Cohasset and nearby towns that attended the Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast on Monday, Jan. 21. We would also like to thank the Cohasset Clergy Association for their sponsorship of this annual event, and especially St. Anthony's Church for their hospitality this year. The Cohasset Mariner did a fine job of covering the event and describing the morning.

The Diversity Committee needs to increase involvement in the planning of this and other activities for our community. Our mission is to:

- encourage an ENVIRONMENT OF RESPECT for all people.
- APPRECIATE THE DIFFERENCES among us.
- provide adults and children in Cohasset with opportunities to enrich their lives and their UNDERSTANDING OF DIVERSITY
- collaborate with schools, clergy, police, and citizens to PROMOTE THESE IDEALS.

Some of the programs we have introduced include:

- peer leader training and teacher training through the World of Difference Program of the Anti-Defamation League.
- the annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Birthday Breakfast.
- community social events highlighting various cultures.

Some of the programs we have sponsored include:

- A presentation by Hawk Henries, a native American musician and storyteller.
- Personal Holocaust story presentations.
- A weeklong intensive study of Japanese culture and dance with Nikki Hu.
- Boston Marathon Wheelchair Division winner, Jean Driscoll, speaking about her disability and athletic training.
- Diverse entertainment at the South Shore Arts Festival.
- Presentations by and about the Tuskegee Airmen.

Introducing new ideas, helping maintain current programs, becoming a leader in promoting inter-cultural understanding — these are all greatly needed for Cohasset right now. Most of the currently active members no longer have children in the schools; new energy and creativity from the entire community is needed. Let us know that you want to be involved. Please contact Susan Etkind at 781-383-6602 or shetkind@comcast.net; or Eva Haber at 781-383-2840 or habereva@aol.com.

Cell phone restrictions while driving

TO THE EDITOR:

While the Mass Legislature continues to debate the implementation of House Bill 4477, several other states have taken action. California, often in the forefront of legislation that leads the nation, has recently enacted very restrictive usage on cell phone use while driving.

Under the California legislation, there is a total ban on the usage by minors between the age of 16 and 18 except for emergency, and for persons 18 years and older the ban on the use of held cell phones is restrictive to emergency use only. However, unlike minors, adults are permitted the use of non hand held cell phones, Such devices include personal blue tooth adaptors, cell phone ear pieces and in the newer vehicles, the use of installed car phones and/or its blue tooth counterpart. Commercial usage is permitted for such devices as two-way radios provided the device does not require it being held to the ear to listen.

Upon learning of the new law effective July 1, 2008, Sandra Hamilton of Woodland Hills said "whee, I am free". Her new Prius hybrid among other things is equipped with the blue tooth device so her telephone calls can be answered and terminated by simply pushing a button and the steering wheel. It also is voice activated so that outgoing calls can be made hands free. Sandra is the CEO of Ednet Career Institute (http://www.ednet4u.com) and like most business execs, her car is her office away from the office.

Federal legislation was introduced some time ago but has lingered allowing the states to act on their own. As a result, many states have taken no action giving rise to the difficulty of knowing when the use the hand held cell phones is permitted during interstate travel. Your first knowledge of the state law may include a fine.

'Unfair use of our tax dollars'

COMMENTARY

CHRIS EVANS

Editor's note: Mr. Evans provided a copy of the following letter for publication.

RE: Treat's Pond Warrant Article, March 29 Town Meeting

Dear Selectmen:

I am away and unable to attend the March 3 Board of Selectmen meeting to discuss the above warrant article. Because I feel very strongly on this issue, I am sending you this letter so that my comments are known to you in absentia, and can form part of the public record. Much could be said, but I keep my comments quite brief and bulleted.

This is an unfair and inappropriate use of our tax dollars — Treat's Pond is a private body of water on private property. It drains to the ocean via Sandy Cove, also privately owned. The owners and surrounding residents are not noted for their poverty. To expect the Federal and State Governments and, in particular, the other residents of Cohasset to cover the costs of

Turnaround too tight at Spring Street

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Greenbush Happenings — A couple of weeks ago, we talked about the dead end at the leg of Spring Street that is accessible form South Main Street, across from the Historical Society's Pratt Building. We talked about that since this is a dead-end street with several homes and getting fire engines into and especially out of the dead-end street becomes important. Recently, the CBB workers came to the site where a fire truck turn around is to be constructed and marked out the edges of the turnaround according to their design. We took a look at the configuration and thought that it looked very tight to turn our large ladder truck around. The Fire Chief concurred with our thoughts.

As a result, we and the chief decided that a full-scale test was warranted. With the permission of St. Anthony's, we set up a trial in its parking lot last Friday, (Feb. 29). We actually marked out the turnaround with chalk and traffic cones and tried to maneuver our ladder truck to turn it around. The test confirmed our suspicions. The space allotted was a bit too tight. None of the several drivers, who tried, were successful at turning the ladder truck around. In subsequent communication with the MBTA, they told us that their engineers had designed this turn around specifically for our largest truck. At this point, we don't know where the process went awry. So, we'll keep you posted as we find out more.

Kevin McRae is an engineer working on the Little Harbor project.

Ladder Truck #1 trying to make the turn during a trial in the St. Anthony's parking lot.

None of the several drivers, who tried, were successful at turning the ladder truck around.

Faces of the Little Harbor Project – We thought that it might be interesting to you to learn a bit about the various faces that you may come in contact as the Little Harbor Project continues on its way. From time to time we will feature one of the people who are making this project work to a successful conclusion. If you are a resident in the area of project construction you have either met Kevin McRae, or soon will. We have had the pleasure of working with Kevin while he was employed by Cashman on the Greenbush project. We found him to be very interesting person and interested in helping us whenever he could. Kevin, as you can see from his formal portrait, is a bear of a guy. But looks are deceiving. We have found him to be quite jovial and to have a great sense of humor.

Currently Kevin, who has a bachelor's degree in Civil Engineering from Northeastern, is employed by Coughlin Environmental Services, LLC, the supervising engineers for the project. Most of Kevin's professional engineering work experience has been with projects in the New England area, particularly around Boston. When you call the project hot line at 781-383-2900, more than likely Kevin will pick up the call. When it comes time for you to work with the project to select how you would like to have the new sewer line routed to your home, Kevin will probably be the person who will bring the necessary paperwork to your home. As a Project Manager, Kevin is one of the engineers responsible for keeping tabs on the contractor to make sure that they are following the job specifications on a day-to-day basis.

When we spoke to Kevin recently, he shared with us that the most difficult part of his job is working with the contractor to keep the streets open and passable as best as possible. His outlook regarding the project is that he works for the residents and will work to protect your interests. If you have any questions or problems concerning the project, please call Kevin on the Little Harbor Project hotline.

Flooding and pollution at Treats Pond

COMMENTARY

MARTIN NEE

If approved by voters at Town Meeting, a side benefit of the program is that it will resolve the flooding problem along Atlantic Avenue.

Over the years a catastrophic breakdown of the drainage system (or lack thereof) in the vicinity of Treats Pond has taken place. The result is evident in the severe flooding of homes and property along Atlantic Avenue when it rains. Long ago, Treats Pond drained into the ocean via a channel to Sandy Cove, but the channel has been filled in over many years due to vast quantities of sand, which have been deposited by the ocean.

The continuous piling of sand on beaches, referred to as "accretion", has been at work on Sandy Cove for more than150 years. During this time the beach has risen more than five to seven feet vertically and it has expanded several hundred feet horizontally. According to maps, records, drawings, written accounts and aerial photographs, a large area of dry land now sits where seawater used to run in and out of the pond.

About 47 years ago, a drain pipe was installed along the alignment of the former channel from Treats Pond to the sea, but ocean currents and wave action deposit about 3 linear feet sand each year in the vicinity of the pipe. The mouth of the pipe, which used to sit on the surface of the beach, is now buried beneath 5 to 7 feet of sand.

In order to drain the pond so it doesn't flood the residents along Atlantic Avenue, the Cohasset DPW sends a backhoe onto the beach when it rains to dig out the end of the pipe. Despite this, Treats Pond overflows frequently and it continuously floods the neighborhood. After one tide cycle or so (about 12 hours), there is virtually no sign that the seven foot deep hole on the beach dug out by the backhoe ever existed. It gets filled in very quickly by the tide and shifting sands and the pipe of course is then clogged and buried again. This goes on for days in a row sometimes — depending on the weather. Draining the pond in this manner is a slow and inefficient process. It often takes several days to get the water level of the pond to an acceptable height; yet before long the DPW crew is back at it again. It's the only way to reduce the flooding at the moment.

In addition to the blocked drainpipe, the capacity of the pond to act as a holding tank has been substantially reduced due to the growth of an invasive plant species called phragmites [frag-my-tees]. Phragmites are a widespread environmental hazard that wreak havoc on retention ponds like Treats Pond and related ecosystems. Each year, the reed like stalks die out, adding a new layer on the bottom of the pond — eventually filling up the pond with muck and displacing more water. From an environmental standpoint the reeds kill off bird populations and other creatures by destroying nesting areas.

Further complicating the situation, there is considerably more volume emptying into the pond than in years past. Hindsight being 20/20, decisions made by the town over many decades have produced roads, driveways and rooftops without any run-off controls. Similar problems plague many areas of town and the nation. In the meantime, the stormwater collected on Atlantic Avenue is simply piped by the town into people's front yards. The flooding is predictable and more water runs into Treats Pond at a much faster rate with each rainfall.

Making matters worse, Treats Pond is heavily polluted due in large part to faulty septic systems in the area. A new sewer system now under construction will dramatically improve the water quality in the pond. But it will do nothing to solve the flooding problems. And the ecosystem of Treats Pond, choked by phragmites, is slowly dying and filling in.

As mentioned in a previous commentary, The Army Corps of Engineers (ACE) has identified Treats Pond for its Saltwater Ecosystem Restoration Program. Similar ACE projects in Massachusetts have shown immense environmental benefits to their surrounding areas. If approved by voters at Town Meeting, a side benefit of the program is that it will resolve the flooding problem along Atlantic Avenue. The Federal Government has allocated $1.1 million toward an estimated $1.7 million project cost. The state is being asked to contribute approximately $500,000 and the Town of Cohasset is being asked to fund about $300,000 (perhaps less if the state funding is successful).

Some in the community would reject the Army Corps of Engineers proposal and give up the federal and state funding that goes along with the project. One argument is that by extending the buried drainpipe further out to sea, the Town could save money and still drain the pond.

ACE engineers have studied the existing pipe and determined that extending it beyond the high tide mark is not a viable solution. Given the pitch of the pipe and its location 5 to 7 feet under the sand, it would have to be extended to around the low tide mark in order to drain at the surface. Some 50 years of experience dictates that storms would batter the pipe and likely dislodge it very quickly. Moreover, the pipe would fill with sand and debris, as it does today, and it would become buried yet again by accreting sand. This time, however, DPW work crews would be in the tidal zone, working against rushing tides and breaking waves.

As mentioned earlier, the diameter of the existing pipe is still too small to drain the pond rapidly enough to prevent flooding.

Consequently, the Army Corps of Engineers WILL NOT fund the replacement or any improvements to the pipe at Sandy Cove. A new pipe to Sandy Cove would come at 100 percent cost to the town. Permitting costs alone for the ACE project are in excess of $200,000 and the Town could expect the same to be true for its own project. In fact, a town funded drainage system for Treats Pond would likely cost about the same as the ACE proposal now estimated to be around $1.7 million.

The ACE plan has a number of difficult challenges that need to be addressed before it can or should be allowed to move forward. But if the town doesn't act quickly to endorse the plan it will lose all federal funding and anticipated state funding for the project — for good. The responsibility to fix the flooding and environmental problems at Treats Pond and along Atlantic Avenue will of course remain with the town.

Why not work together to address community concerns with the ACE's project at pennies on the dollar while we still can?

Martin A. Nee lives at 109 Atlantic Avenue. Mr. Nee is the Chairman of the Cohasset Stormwater Management Committee, but his views stated above are his expressions as a private citizen.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Dow announces run for Sewer Commission

My name is Jim Dow and I am running for a seat on the Cohasset Sewer Commission.

I have lived in Cohasset for almost 13 years. My wife Dama is a school bus driver in Cohasset and we have an 11-year old daughter Christina who is currently in the fifth grade at the Deer Hill School.

I have worked for the Town of Hingham Sewer Department for almost 21 years, the past 17 years as the Supervisor. In this role, I have run the daily operations of the department, overseeing the field crew, establishing routines, procedures, policies and programs. I help to set up the Capital Budget for projects based on a 5-year plan and am responsible for the hiring of contractors and the purchasing of needed supplies while adhering to state procurement rules. I have worked directly with countless contractors performing projects as well as conducting inspectional services to insure compliance with state and local regulations. I have had the benefit of taking part, directly and indirectly with several sewer extension and development projects in my 21 years with the Hingham Sewer Department.

I focus on trying to maintain a safe and efficient workplace while putting the needs of the employees and customers at the forefront. For my efforts helping the citizens, I was presented the Employee Recognition Award in 2005 given out annually to one town employee for outstanding customer service.

With the ongoing projects in Cohasset and future expansion and development on the horizon, we will be going through several changes as residents and I would like to do my part to help minimize any distractions and problems that sometimes accompany change. I feel that with my background and experience, I would be an asset to the community of Cohasset as a Sewer Commissioner and would appreciate your support.

Let's have another study

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The boys and girls who have much too much time on their hands and feel the need to spend it on items of lasting insignificance are at it again.

Susan Hughes, a psychologist at Albright University, wondered why people kiss when the mouth is a well-known carrier of germs. So she asked 1,000 willing – make that very willing – Albright students to do the heavy lifting in the study.

She found that the men preferred sloppy, open-mouthed kisses that led directly to bed without passing go while women, bless their calculating little hearts, used them to assess the long-term possibilities of the human male.

"No wonder we're nervous about our first kiss," Hughes said.

In a similar vein, a study published in The British Journal of Plastic Surgery discovered that men have such a poor grasp of women's lingerie that many risk serious injury to themselves while removing a bra.

The Journal cited a 27-year-old man who suffered a broken finger and ligament damage in a skirmish with a recalcitrant bra strap.

"This is the type of thing that is more commonly associated with sport, particularly rock climbing," plastic surgeon Andrew Fleming said.

How long will it be before Lingerie Removal 101 appears in the BU catalogue?

We all know that artificial sweeteners like Sweet 'n' Low and Equal can cut our sugar intake when we're on diets, but researchers at Purdue University have found that they may have a direct opposite effect.

They fed sugared and sugar-free yogurt to rats and found that those who used the artificial sweeteners associated sweetness with calories and went back for seconds and thirds, thus defeating the purpose of the diet in the first place.

The Netherlands National Institute for Public Health and the Environment discovered that, contrary to conventional wisdom, the health-care costs of healthy people outstrip those of smokers and fat folk – the healthy $417,000, smokers $326,000, and fatsos $371,000.

The reason? Smokers die seven years earlier and fatties four years earlier than the health nuts.

If an apple a day can keep the doctor away then maybe the caffeine in three cups of coffee can keep Alzheimer's away.

The Faculty of Medicine in Lisbon, Portugal, studied 54 Alzheimer's patients and 54 normal elderly and found the latter drank three to four cups of coffee a day from the age of 25 while the former limited their consumption to one.

At the same time, researchers at Rutgers University were touting caffeine as a cure for cancer, one kind of cancer, anyway.

They discovered that covering mice with a lotion of caffeine kept them from developing skin tumors by making the cancer cells commit suicide without affecting the normal cells.

Researchers at the Cancer Centre Hospital in Aichi, Japan, report that eating sushi could protect smokers from cancer of the lungs.

They studied 4,000 people with healthy lungs and 1,000 with lung cancer and discovered that those who ate raw fresh fish regularly were much less likely to develop cancer.

But that doesn't hold for dried fish or canned tuna.

The maps show a creek connecting Treat's Pond to the ocean at Sandy Cove in 1852 and in 1876 at right. There has never been a block to cut Treat's Pond off from the ocean in the 1800's or anytime else. Treat's has always had an overflow creek running to Sandy Cove and the ocean, Peter Whittemore said, but has always been a fresh watershed pond.

Honoring the past, honoring the deeds, honoring Treat's Pond

COMMENTARY

PETER WHITTEMORE

There is no historical record of Treat's Pond ever being salt water.

I write to simply set the record straight on several matters regarding the threat to Treat's Pond posed by the so-called Treat's Pond restoration project. Firstly, as the maps here reproduced show, there has never been a block to cut Treat's Pond off from the ocean in the 1800's or anytime else. Treats has always had a overflow creek running to Sandy Cove and the ocean. Treat's has always been a fresh watershed pond, fed by what was called Sandy Cove Brook as it ran southward along Atlantic Avenue from Lothrop Lane and the swamp south of Mohawk Way, to Treat's Pond and then out to the ocean at Sandy Cove. There is no historical record of Treat's Pond ever being salt water. The Blizzard of 1978 and the Gale of 1851 may have flooded Atlantic Avenue, but they also flooded Elm, Margin, and Border streets, and the low end of Ripley Road. Those extreme events happen, but do not determine the overall historical reality.

The Pond has never been "disconnected" from the ocean. There has been a stream and then a pipeway since maps and records have been kept; allowing the overflow from Treat's to be released to the ocean. Harold Litchfield last replaced that overflow in the 60s under contract from the town with a pipe that, as he says, runs out to the cove at a downhill angle for one reason and one reason only: it was meant to keep saltwater from getting up into and fouling the fresh water Pond. Taking together the Little Harbor marshland and the combined Gulf River and Bailey's Creek marshland along with both sides of the Channel, we do not need to be worried about ten more acres of salt marshland. What we really need to preserve is coastal freshwater marshland, a unique habitat that serves diversity.

Secondly, the Army Corps of Engineers do not have control over Treat's Pond under any waterway act. The Town of Cohasset has control of Treat's Pond under the Bigelow conservation restriction and easement of 1964. The new homeowners have bought into that easement and restriction, as Jim Drydale noted last week, by their deeds of 1978. Any attempt to wrest control of that and dismiss its covenants is a slap in the face of every conscientious land preservationist's sentiments and is a deterrent to any future such conservation grants to the town by such civic-minded people as Mrs. Bigelow. Is Wheelwright Park next? Or Whitney-Thayer Woods?

By eminent domain, these so-called friends of Treat's seek to wrest land from their own neighbors and salt tens of acres of woodland marshes, in complete disregard for the natural habitat as it exists and in complete disregard for the very people, the Whitehead Road homeowners, who by their deliberate preservationist ethics have kept Cohasset Harbor's entrance, one of the most pristine eelgrass and marsh grass meadows from Cape Elizabeth to Cape Cod, free of "macmansion" blight. Is an eminent domain land-taking for a four-foot diameter pipeway into the channel the thanks they get from this town? I submit not, and trust my town's members to vote NO on the "Treat's Pond Restoration" article, should these self-appointed so-called friends of Treats not see the light of day and withdraw it from consideration. If their driveways flood they should make the existing drains work. The town already owns the easement and doesn't need to take anyone's land under the thin but transparent guise of false environmental largess.

Peter Whittemore lives at 47 Elm Court.

Q&A about the Treat's Pond project

COMMENTARY

JAQUELINE & RALPH DORMITZER

The Project— The Army Corps is recommending the construction of a pipe and control structure to connect Treat's Pond to the ocean at Cohasset Outer Harbor. The purpose is to restore Treat's Pond to a healthy saltwater ecosystem, alleviate flooding, and reestablish natural flushing of the pond – fresh water out and saltwater in.

The project comes under Section 206 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 – Aquatic Ecosystem Restoration. The Act specifies that the project improve the quality of the environment, be in the public interest, and be cost-effective.

The Problem —Treat's Pond is the low point of an approximately 60-acre watershed. The pond abuts Atlantic Ave immediately north of Whitehead Road. It is now landlocked, having no natural outlet to the sea. In a rainstorm, water from this large watershed flows into the pond, fills it up, and backfloods Atlantic Ave. Even in minor rain events, rivers of water from the upland side of Atlantic Ave flow into the pond and invade a dozen or more neighboring properties. The pond has extraordinarily high bacterial counts, is a breeding ground for mosquitoes, is choked with Phragmites, and is dying.

The Benefits of the Project — The Army Corps project will restore saltwater flushing, reduce the Phragmite invasion, alleviate flooding, clean the water, kill mosquitoes, and create a healthy pond and salt marsh.

The Cost — The estimate is $1.7 million. Of this total the Federal Government has already appropriated $1.1 million. The non-federal share is 35%, or $595 thousand, to be raised through town, state, and other grant sources. The warrant article for the March 29, 2008, Town Meeting is for $300,000 contingent on receipt of matching funds.

Frequently Asked Questions

• Why restore Treat's Pond to a saltwater pond if it has never been one?

It was a saltwater pond. The Coast and Geodetic Survey map of 1853 (drawn from a survey in 1847) shows the "guzzle" or connection between the pond and the ocean as well as the contour of the cove from that time. Lucy Treat mentions rowing in a small boat on the "guzzle" between the pond and the cove. Until 1960, the original pipe had two-way flow. In fact, Treat's Pond and Little Harbor are quite similar in how they were and are connected to the sea and in the regular tidal flows which once refreshed both bodies of water.

Why not route the pipe to Sandy Cove?

• The Army Corps has ruled out its participation in and funding of a route to Sandy Cove based on cost and efficiency. The location was also deemed unsuitable because of sand accretion, storm effects, and long-term maintenance issues. Moreover, because of the elevation of the pipe, the storage capacity of the pond would have compromised the flood benefits from the project. It is the longest route, the most invasive, and significantly longer than the recommended route to Cohasset Outer Harbor. The Sandy Cove route also required a surface easement on private property for the installation of a 2-foot x 10-foot culvert and outfall, twice as large as that required for the outer harbor route.

• Why not just extend the current pipe?

Extending the current pipe will not work because the beach is a constantly shifting medium, accreting sand at three feet/year. The sand would bury a new pipe as it has all previous pipes. Since the pipe would need to be extended to low water, access for cleanouts by the DPW would require working either in the surf or in a narrow window of time at mean low water. Draining but not flushing the pond would not solve the long-term degradation of the pond. The Army Corps, which has jurisdiction over the pond under the Clean Water Act, has determined that saltwater exchange is necessary to meet its environmental responsibility. Simply dumping pond and storm water onto the beach would be environmentally irresponsible. The current $1.1 million of Federal funding would also be lost if the town fails to support the Army Corps plan.

Moreover, the current pipe is prohibited by deed from being "relocated, enlarged, or expanded from [its] present use or [its] present location". Extending the pipe would require a permit from the Army Corps of Engineers and the Cohasset Conservation Commission; an Environmental Assessment; and compliance with MEPA, Chapter 91, and Coastal Zone Management. Quotes on design and permitting costs are in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Moreover, at 24 inches in diameter, the pipe is undersized. The pond fills up and overflows faster than the pipe can empty it. As the tide rises, it also blocks flow

• Why aren't BMPs (e.g., rain gardens) a solution?

Although it is desirable to add rain gardens to the project, the majority of the watershed is impermeable granite ledge where no installation of rain gardens is possible. In addition the Army Corps estimates that at a moderate rainfall of 2.8 inches the flow rate will be 24 cubic feet/second, a rate that no conceivable combination of rain gardens could affect.

• Is Treat's Pond on private property?

Treat's Pond is under the grant of a Deed of Easement and a conservation restriction by Elizabeth Bigelow dated Dec. 7, 1964.

fixing up their pond is an outrage, especially as the payees have no legal access to the property for which they would be billed.

Although this is portrayed as a "restoration" project, much of the debate surrounding Treat's Pond concerns flood control. Flooding is a major problem in Cohasset and it affects many citizens, not just the few who live by Treat's Pond. In particular, residents who live by Jacob's Meadow suffer periodic flooding of their houses with sewage. I submit that these people should be ahead of the Treat's Ponders in the queue for public assistance.

The town is trying to develop a comprehensive storm water policy for all of its citizens. It would be prudent to allow this to take effect before singling out the Treat's Pond project for preferential, advance attention. According to a recent telephone conversation, money allocated to the Army Corps of Engineers (ACE) for this project does not have to be spent within a particular time frame, so it will not disappear if we do not act quickly.

The "Salt Water Restoration" claim is specious — Under the present circumstances, it is beyond the remit of ACE to modify Treat's Pond for reasons of flood control. However, it can do so as part of its Salt Water Restoration mandate. We are thus witnessing the strange, Procrustean exercise of re-writing the history of Treat's Pond to give it a robust saline pedigree that it probably never had. The saline history of Treat's Pond is a diversionary myth that really needs to be dismissed once and for all.

Eminent domain is an invidious way to enforce this project — In its draft form, article 24 authorizes "... the Board of Selectmen to acquire by purchase, gift or eminent domain such easements or other property interests as may be advisable to carry out this project." If this wording remains in the final article, it will enable the town to victimize citizens whose only crime is to own property that stands in the way of the Treat's Pond juggernaut. This is not only shameful, but, if enacted, will considerably increase the cost of the project. One family of potential victims has had its threatened piece of land independently valued at $800,000.

The total cost to Cohasset taxpayers could be far higher than advertised —As things stand, the entire project is estimated to cost $1.7 million, of which the town of Cohasset will be liable for about $600,000. I believe that the town is attempting to secure money from the State of Massachusetts to defray part of its costs. But, as noted above, acquiring the necessary land for the project, whether by negotiation or eminent domain, will add enormously to the final bill. The $800,000 price tag noted above only covers one parcel of land. Additional property will also be needed if the Whale Meadow route is selected. Collectively, there could be additional costs of well over $1 million merely to acquire land.

There is a simpler and far less expensive solution — There is already a pipe that drains Treat's Pond to the ocean. Flooding happens after heavy rain when the pipe becomes clogged. These obstructions occur, in part, because property owners have prevented DPW workers from gaining regular access to the pipe for maintenance purposes. This occurs despite the town owning the 1964 Bigelow easement to maintain Treat's Pond in its natural state as a marsh pond.

At the other end of Sandy Cove a similar pipe successfully prevents flooding from the northern sector of the Treat's Pond catchment area. The major difference between this pipe and the troublesome one is its length. The contractor who installed the pipe that works estimates a $4,000 cost to remedy the Treat's Pond pipe.

A suggested compromise — Rather than the town immediately signing onto an unfair and environmentally questionable project with a high and presently unknown final cost, it may be better to take a rational, incremental approach to the problem:

Spend $4,000 on an improved drainage pipe — Allow next year's sewering of houses in the Treat's Pond area to take effect. The absence of leaking septic systems will lower water levels and reduce the nitrogenous waste that so strongly promotes the growth of Phragmites.

While this is happening the town will have developed a comprehensive storm water management policy for all of Cohasset. Its implementation should further reduce, and possibly eliminate, flooding around Treat's Pond.

If serious problems persist, then consider additional measures, including the present ones from ACE. According to my information from ACE, the federal funds for this project are not subject to a sunset clause.

If, finally, it is necessary to spend public money on this private property, Cohasset taxpayers should have reasonable access to Treat's Pond and Sandy Cove.

Pragmites Australis is the real culprit

COMMENTARY

RICHARD BROOKS

I was pleased to see, apparently for the first time, an article in last Friday's Mariner on the problems, indeed current loss of, Treats Pond on Atlantic Avenue involving the relatively new, virulent species of the destructive reed known as Phragmites Australis.

This species, introduced to the USA by accident from Europe about 15+ or so years ago, has already become a national problem of horrific magnitude, having spread across the entire country in just a few years. The seeds are airborne and in huge quantity. Once established in any type of fresh or brackish water wetland area, it spreads like wildfire, relatively speaking. These are monstrous plants, growing up to 16 feet tall, spread via deep underground root mat systems, grow so dense that they choke out all other plant species (one can not even walk through them!), render the wetland unsuitable as a wildlife habitat and are immune to all but one expensive brand of herbicide! Even then, it takes several years of treatment to get rid of them and involves many man hours and expenses to succeed.

If you search your PC for "phragmites" or "phragmites control," you will be amazed at the hundreds of sites now available, from all over the country and hundreds of State and government agencies on this huge, as yet unchecked and rapidly spreading national problem. Coastal areas are especially vulnerable and this problem is well advanced all along the Eastern Seaboard. Cape May in New Jersy has lost thousands of acres of it famous wetland Park/Habitat.

Hundreds of thousands of acres of wetlands, including salt meadows, salt marshes, river estuaries, harbors, etc. have already been lost and the list is growing at an amazing pace-nationally. Once you can recognize these plants, you will see them everywhere — and I mean everywhere! Along the coast and inland as well. They are already an "unpublicized" major problem for Cohasset and neighboring Towns. I'd encourage the Mariner to do a significant article on the subject — perhaps helping people to recognize an early infestation and seeking professional remedial action at an early stage before they get entrenched and rapidly spread. They grow to amazing heights — standing next to a stand of them is actually intimidating, even to me with my 5'18" height!

Here in Cohasset, you can see them everywhere! As you drive north on 3A, look at the wetlands to your right behind JJ's and up towards the train station! The valuable and large Jacobs Meadow, which runs from behind the old library all the way to the Harbor, is now lost. Treats Pond, mentioned above, is heavily infested and no longer recognizable. Straights Pond infested. Peck's Meadow off Jerusalem Road is heavily infested and faces extinction. There are several infestations in the main Little Harbor in the shore and marsh areas. A huge and spreading infestation exists along the Bow Street end of the Harbor. Salt marshes and meadows are easily infested because the salt water can readily become brackish due to storms and fresh water inflows.

The best defense? — in coastal areas, the phragmite seeds do not germinate in good salinity seawater, the presence of which also can slow the spreading of existing infestations substantially. All wetlands experts advise keeping wetlands flushed with seawater, especially the muddy shorelines where, at low tides, the infestations first take root. Where necessary, the universal, professional advice is to install self-regulating tide gates to keep the meadows, marshes, harbors, etc flooded with seawater at low tide periods to prevent seed germination and infestations in the mud and shores. Cohasset should evaluate this option where applicable.

Jacobs Meadow was lost when, due to the flooding from increased fresh water inflow, apparently the inflow of seawater was decreased intentionally? At Inner Little Harbor, we are blessed because Cat Dam, a self-regulating tide gate, keeps the Harbor covered with a low level of seawater during the unusually long low tide periods where the Harbor is totally empty of seawater and the entire mud bottoms and shore marshes are exposed and highly vulnerable. Cat Dam was not built in 1957 for the current phragmites onslaught — but those few who perpetually advocate having it removed are unfamiliar with or insensitive to the phragmites invasion. Essentially all other salt meadows, marshes, harbors, wetlands in Cohasset are already infested, some to extremis! The worst is yet to come.

Some Town officials are aware of and starting to cope with the phragmites — hence the welcome Mariner article on Treats Pond. More information for the public is needed. I know the Conservation Commission is up to speed. I thank Selectman Dormitzer for first bringing the phragmites topic to our attention well over a year ago. A lot of infestations all along Atlantic Avenue.

Cohasset has its challenges — and the Phragmites Australis major problem has to be elevated to a higher priority. We are losing our natural assets and habitats, especially along our beautiful coastline and many other water and wetland habitats, and public information/education is needed. Check it out on your PC— you'll be amazed!

HEALTH NOTES

Best solution could be an interim one

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Relieving the flooding hazard of those houses to the northwest of Atlantic Avenue would be temporarily accomplished by lowering Treats Pond water level using the existing regular cleanout by the DPW.

The Board of Health has been nothing if not outspoken in taking a position on storm water. Therefore it feels strange to find one's self in a position opposing what is billed as an environmental solution for Treat's pond. But the idea of spending millions from Washington's pork barrel for a fix which sends ever more water into Cohasset's already beleaguered harbor makes no sense before we are given the results of a study to create a town-wide storm water and drainage master plan, especially since the Army Corps funds are safe from reallocation until 2009. Hopefully new planning addresses the numerous factors making up the storm water problem.

The Drainage Master Plan the Town has paid for and now nearing completion depends on a great number of variables including the elevation of Treats Pond, which may be changed by any of the long-term solutions now being considered. Relieving the flooding hazard of those houses to the northwest of Atlantic Avenue would be temporarily accomplished by lowering Treats Pond water level using the existing regular cleanout by the DPW.

The drainage, water/sewer construction now ongoing on Atlantic Avenue requires drainage on both sides of the road and those exposed to the hazards of excessive storm water entering their homes should be afforded early relief until a complete solution is implemented.

Any plan should immediately attack the major flooding to the northeast side of Atlantic Avenue by re-mediating its primary source: — the accumulation of water along the Southwest side of Atlantic Avenue. Solution to such flooding should be carried into the uplands where it originated. Parcels away from Atlantic Avenue near Great Brewster Woods should be meticulously examined to determining their recharge capacity and built into the plan. This situation should have been addressed when the building started along Atlantic and Beach Street.

Even elevating Atlantic Avenue by a few inches of asphalt and stopping drainage from the Town side of Atlantic Avenue might have the combined virtues of creating a roadside recharge area reducing flooding near Treats Pond and adjoining homes while exposing the magnitude of the problem of disposal of water now draining from the uplands.

Any effort to solve drainage must include an effort to stop storm water near its source, using the most modern proved and validated storm-water recharge techniques available. Many are not cheap, but should normally have been called for when landowners on the North side of Atlantic Avenue built the large dwellings on that side of the road. When the effects of an early bout of remediation to Atlantic Avenue north side are evaluated; and while the construction associated with water, sewer, and drainage improvements are going on, more comprehensive remediation can be considered, planned and added. We would then at least have the horse before the cart and the Army engineers would have the vision, better data — and the time- to get it right.

The Board of Health has been monitoring water in Treats Pond for years and we have not found it to contain the presence of human bacteria such as fecal coli form whereas Whale Meadow has had moderate levels of fecal coli form, the source of which we have been unsuccessful in locating.

Never before in the Town's history have we been exposed to such disruption of our roadways and systems of communication and commerce. It is incumbent on all of us to be indulgent and forgiving of others during all the dislocation. Also, there is every reason to believe that water level rise will continue as global warming progresses; a condition, which must also be considered

Finally, during these troubled times, all of us, all over Town, including those near Treats Pond, should act like neighbors and think about their abutters. Is it only in Cohasset that the DPW is prevented from using rights of way to get rid of flooding in a neighbor's home?

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Q&A about the Treat's Pond project

COMMENTARY

FROM DORMITZER, PAGE 12

It places responsibility for the pond with the Town of Cohasset. There are five property owners who have technical ownership of the pond but no control over its use. There is no legal connection between the pond and Sandy Cove except an easement for the current drainage pipe. The easement does not provide for right of access to the pipe. The current pipe also has a deed restriction dated Jan. 12, 1979 that states: "Said drainage pipes and conduits shall not be relocated, enlarged, or expanded from [its] present use or [its] present location".

• Why should town money (and Federal and State funds) be used to alleviate flooding on Atlantic Ave?

Atlantic Avenue is either the first or second most affected area by storm water flooding in Cohasset. Nearly every rainstorm floods some portion of the property of two dozen homes. The town has accepted public responsibility for flood relief and ecological restoration at James Brook, Jacob's Meadow, Little Harbor, Strait's Pond and the Parker Ave channel. It also has a public responsibility for flood relief and ecological restoration on Atlantic Ave. The project is highly leveraged with funding from Federal, State and other sources. It is anticipated that the town's share will ultimately be only 15% of the project cost.

• Can we depend on the Army Corps plan to restore Treat's Pond and alleviate the flooding on Atlantic Ave?

The Army Corps has done detailed studies of the water quality effects, hydrological performance of the pipe, tide elevations and flow, and water elevations under worst-case conditions in the pond and in neighboring yards. These studies demonstrate that their solution will work. There are multiple examples of similar successful projects throughout Massachusetts and the U.S., including World's End in Hingham. They have also granted the town control over the tide gate for the purpose of managing pond elevations in extreme storm events.

• Has the town incurred any financial obligation with regard to the Army Corps project?

The town has incurred no financial obligation with regard to the project but must, when construction begins in early 2009, commit to its share.

• What permits/approvals will be required?

The project will require an Army Corps permit, an Environmental Assessment, and a Cohasset Conservation Commission permit. The project also must comply with MEPA, meet Chapter 91 requirements, and satisfy Coastal Zone Management requirements. These same requirements apply to the building or extension of any pipe into an intertidal area.

• What easements are being requested for the Army Corps plan?

The Army Corps project requires that there be easements for a subsurface pipe under two properties (one under an existing driveway and the other under a marsh) and for the installation of an inlet, discharge outlet, and tide gate. Easements would be required irrespective of the location of the pipe. Underground easements for utilities and drainage are common in most deeds. The town will reimburse the owners of the properties for the value of the easements. The funding for the easements is included in the project cost.

• What about potential pollution from the pond under the Army Corps plan?

Camp Dresser and McKee calculated bacteria counts using worst-case analysis. Under dry conditions bacteria counts at the outlet of the pipe are well under state standards for recreational use including swimming. Under wet conditions (i.e., storm events) bacteria loads will slightly exceed state standards for swimming at 50 feet from the end of the pipe. This count will improve when the sewer system along Atlantic Ave. is finished and BMPs (rain gardens) are implemented to clean runoff into the pond.

•Will the proposed route of the pipe harm Whale Meadow?

The proposed pipe will not harm Whale Meadow. There is already an existing drainage pipe under Whale Meadow. It drains properties on the north side of Whitehead Road. Its outfall is approximately 600 feet from the Cohasset outer harbor channel. The proposed pipe would parallel the existing one and cross under the meadow with an outfall adjacent to the existing one. Its outfall will not be visible except at low tide. Flow from the new pipe will enter the existing channel through the eelgrass. Also, this will not affect the clam-flats, which have already been closed.

• What if Town Meeting fails to approve the project?

The town will still be obligated to resolve flooding problems along Atlantic Ave. Current storm water drains simply move water from one side of the street to the other and into people's yards, with no outlet. The town will also have to address the restoration of the pond, as it is the custodian of the pond under the deed of Elizabeth Bigelow, who granted the town a conservation easement and restriction over the pond for the purpose of promoting and developing natural resources. The pond has been filling with Phragmite and dying for some time, and this process will continue unless remedial action is taken. If town meeting fails to approve the project, all of these obligations would have to be fulfilled through local taxation without the Federal grant of $1.1million. Congressman Delahunt will redirect the grant to a similar project within his district.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

For Selectman candidates: Is affordable housing a critical issue for Cohasset?

SELECTMAN/Fred Koed

Affordable housing is a critical issue for Cohasset, as it is an important way to maintain economic diversity. Economic diversity has given Cohasset much of its character. The Town of Cohasset has many newer employees for instance, that due to the cost of real estate in town are forced to live far from their jobs. Teachers, firemen, police, highway, water department and town hall employees are examples of employees that may find Cohasset real estate prices beyond their reach.

Years ago our firemen lived much closer to Cohasset. Proximity is important in case of an emergency such as a call back or a second alarm fire. Many times the Police Department will request the Highway Department to get a road sander out right away to take care of patches of black ice or slippery roads. Those are just two examples of how maintaining public safety may be even more of a challenge in the future, as local firemen and highway staff retire in the future.

Many of our Cohasset school children have traversed our system, completed college and hope someday to return to Cohasset to live near the coast. Smaller units of affordable rental housing could be a path for them to save money for a down payment. Smaller affordable condo units could be a path for them to build equity.

Then there are those seniors that may not qualify for senior affordable housing at 60 Elm Street, but would still like to downsize and stay in Cohasset. Because of the gap in the marketplace, in order to downsize they would have few options but to move outside of Cohasset. So, yes I believe affordable housing in Cohasset will benefit the entire town.

SELECTMAN/ Karen Quigley

Yes, in so far as Cohasset in a crisis of non-compliance with the legislated requirements for 'affordable' housing and is, therefore, vulnerable to 40B mega-development that will overtax our town services, infrastructure and schools.

It's a complicated, emotional issue. Conceptually, everyone is in favor of affordable housing. However, almost no one wants to live in it – which is a good thing because very few, if any, Cohasset residents qualify under state standards. (An expensive lesson learned from the town's last foray into affordable housing.) And then there's the fact that no one wants it in their neighborhood.

So, all in all, the Affordable Housing Committee has the unenviable job of identifying a solution to a frustrating and vexing compliance, not housing, problem. Even if they succeed in unraveling the Gordian Knot, the direct housing benefit to Cohasset residents is minimal while the costs to the town are great.

That having been said, I believe that when most Cohasset residents say affordable they mean moderately-priced. And herein lies the real critical housing issue: as the price of land and homes rises and demographics trend toward the more affluent, there is a widening gap between reality and the possibility of affordability.

The question then becomes . . . how can we make sure economic diversity will survive in Cohasset. As Selectman, I will do my best to find the answers to this question.

For Sewer Commission candidates:

In light of the plant overflow events, some residents have no confidence in the Sewer Commission. What can you do to turn that around?

SEWER COMMISSION/ Wayne Sawchuk

The residents along Elm Street and Summer Street bordering Jacob's Meadow have real concerns when the sewer plant overflows and untreated sewage spews down the sewer plant's driveway and flows into the marsh.

Everyone in Cohasset should be concerned about the health effects of this situation.

The overflow event has occurred on four occasions in the past two years, with the most recent incident just a couple of weeks ago. According to the sewer plant manager last Monday night Feb. 25th the plant was inundated with 1.7 million gallons of flow, exceeding the normal 300,000 gallons daily flow during this time of year.

The Sewer Commissioners are working on solutions to the plant overflows and infiltration into the sewer collection system. Their consulting engineers are completing a draft report of their findings for presentation to the Board at the end of March.

The Commissioners have also been told by their engineer that the emergency overflow pipe in the treatment plant will be installed within 6 weeks, which will allow for treatment and emergency bypass to prevent future plant overflows.

Finally, the Commissioners have said at the most recent meeting that they will notify residents in a timelier manner, should any event occur at the plant, which could constitute a threat to the health or safety of the residents.

If elected to the Sewer Commission, I would follow through on these initiatives and see that the residents are kept informed of the progress of the plant upgrades.

By being both more responsive to the residents and keeping better tabs on the progress of the sewer expansion work, the confidence level will certainly improve.

SEWER COMMISSION/ Jim Dow

Having area residents of any Town-owned facility confident in the people responsible for those facilities is very important. We, as a community need to work together to make sure than all emergency conditions, whether man-made or nature-related are handled in a timely fashion.

I agree with the Sewer Commission that tending to the emergency at hand is the first priority but feel that notifying the area abutters is very important. This notification will allow neighbors to plan accordingly, whether it is going for a walk, letting their pets outside or just minimizing the amount of water being used in their homes.

Formulating, establishing and carrying out a plan of action when a sewer overflow event happens is one of the most important things. The plan should be one that the residents, field crews and Commission can agree upon that will keep everyone on the same page for the duration of any event. It should allow the monitoring, repairing and subsequent clean-up possible in the least amount of time while keeping the environmental and neighborhood impact to a minimum.

I don't feel that there is any reason that the Town should lose faith or confidence in the Sewer Commission. Like all Town Boards and Committees, it is made up of a diverse group of individuals who bring their own experience and knowledge to the table to make Cohasset a better place to live. It's been my experience that if there are ways to improve, input from residents that have first-hand knowledge are always welcome. Part of the responsibility of being an elected official would seem to be to answer to the people who put you in office.

Planning Board candidates: Has the Large House Site Plan Review done its job in controlling "mansionization?"

PLANNING BOARD/ Clark Brewer

In the Feb. 29th Mariner, editor Mary Ford asks for a response to the question: "Has the Large House Site Plan Review done its job in controlling mansionization?"

Since voted in at the 2004 Spring Town Meeting, the Planning Board has reviewed over 20 proposals. These include expansion of existing homes totaling over 3,500 gross square feet. The area calculation does not include unheated/unfinished spaces or garages. Proposals are reviewed in relation to their context, property lines, lot coverage, address stormwater and other issues. Neighbors and abutters have a chance to see what is planned prior to construction and contribute their thoughts or concerns. This process has the potential to create thoughtful and detailed proposals. Applicants and their consultants consider relevant issues and impact mitigation in order to get approved quickly.

Houses and buildings are a public expression of their owners and exist largely as part of a public landscape. As a collective, they can form the character of a neighborhood. Cohasset's unique natural terrain can create limitations that generate organic form to residential development. Solutions to limitation can produce unfortunate or creative and attractive results. Poorly conceived houses are ugly, awkward, poorly detailed, ungainly and can negatively impact their neighbors property. We all wonder at one time or another "how did that happen?"

I doubt this bylaw has controlled mansionization significantly. An uncertain process, additional expense or neighbor objections will deter some. Builders and developers with fixed land costs maximize profit by building and selling large houses. I think the bylaw was a response to this conspicuous consumption.

There will always be those with the means and patience to build what they want, what suits their needs and concept of home. There will be others with a moderate approach to meeting their housing needs.

PLANNING BOARD/ Charles Samuelson

The Zoning Bylaws require proposed residential construction greater than 6,000 square feet be presented to the Planning Board. The Bylaws instruct the Planning Board to "review and discuss" and "recommend", not "approve". Thus I would interpret the purpose of this regulation to communicate the proposed plan to interested parties including abutters and other town boards and departments, to help identify concerns and to recommend appropriate action. I would take the position that nothing in this regulation interferes with the right of a property owner to use the property as he/she desires, as long as all other regulations are adhered with.

NEXT WEEK'S QUESTIONS

For School Committee candidate: It is rumored that more Cohasset students are going to private high schools than ever before. Is this the case? And does it have more to do with parents' ability to pay for a private education or the quality of a Cohasset High School education?

For Selectman candidates: As "generalists" representing the entire town, when should the Board of Selectmen get involved in the business of other elected and appointed boards or commissions?

For Sewer Commission candidates: Growth in the village largely impossible due to sewer capacity. Yet, the economic health of the village is fragile. What steps could the Sewer Commission be taking to address this issue?

For Planning Board candidates: We're not sure the public understands the different roles of the planning and zoning boards. Does the Planning Board have a role when it comes to zoning issues and could there be better communication between the planning board and ZBA?

Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Tuesday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)

Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Tuesday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers, short position statements and the like.

All candidates, opposed or unopposed, may submit a photograph and formal announcement.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

For School Committee candidate :

Have the schools lost ground since the failure of the override two years ago?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Alfred Slanetz

No. The schools have gained ground by multiple measures over the past two years. This is independent of the override.

The school mission is to develop each child as the best version of them-self: achieving at their aptitude in reading, writing and arithmetic; developing a character of self-discipline, organization and service; and gaining a foundation in the global, cultural and scientific basis of our world. Our district goal is to be amongst the top 10 schools statewide.

The school has generated more non-property tax revenues than any other Town department: 11% annual growth in revenue including

- Transportation fees,
- Kindergarten tuition,
- Athletic fees,
- CEF/Booster donations,
- Grants
- Chapter 70 State Support.

With the dismal economic outlook and burden focused on a segment of the community, this revenue growth rate is likely to flatten.

The school implemented accurate accounting, line item transfer and fiscal management policies and instituted cost savings in

- Transportation
- Energy
- Purchasing
- Custodial services.

We restructured teaching for improved education quality and efficiency:

- Teachers move with larger classes
- Teachers work in integrated teams at each grade
- Early intervention implemented to decrease long-term special education students
- In-house special education minimized costly out of district tuitions and kept students with their friends.

These efforts reallocated financial resources to the classroom enabling:

- Additional teachers with expertise in reading and math,
- Maintained class size
- New textbooks/curriculum
- Professional development
- Full-day kindergarten, engineering, electives.

To assure that these improvements are sustainable, as policy we budgeted conservatively and relied solely on operating budget for recurring costs.

School budgeting is based upon operational requirements to achieve strategic goals. An override is a tool in municipal finance; Achieving goals is the end game. We've achieved many but have more to go.

Good contributes to Library Endowment

Genevieve Good has lived in and loved the Town of Cohasset for more than 75 years. During that time she has seen a lot of change. "Sometimes I think I've landed in a totally different place." One constant during all that time, however, has been her love for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The Cohasset Library Trust recently announced her gift of $5,000 to add to the Frederick L. Good, Jr. Fund in the Library Endowment, established in 1992 in memory of her husband. Her gift is the first to be added to the Endowment Wall since the Library Trust was established in late 2006.

Genevieve O'Malley started spending her summers here as a young girl, when her family's home sat alone along the Jerusalem Road coastline. In 1936 her brother sent the family a telegram asking them to go outside and watch him fly by in the Hindenburg (the world's largest dirigible), on its way back from Europe. During World War II her family's house was commandeered by the Coast Guard to watch for enemy ships. She remembers attending horse shows where the South Shore Music Circus now stands.

For more than 15 years Genevieve has volunteered at the library, putting protective covers on new acquisitions. She loves getting a first look at what comes in.

Genevieve Good

In 1943 Genevieve married Fred Good, who also grew up spending summers in Cohasset. They soon decided to live in town year-round and raised four children here. In those days Boston was a quick 30-minute commute. Genevieve reports that Fred used to go to the library every week, where the librarian would choose just the perfect book for him. Their youngest daughter, Galen, remembers that in the previous Paul Pratt building, she would find her way into the stacks where she could sit and look through the glass ceiling to the shadows of the people walking above. It was a 'fairyland' to her.

Despite her fond memories, Genevieve is thrilled with the new Paul Pratt library. "The new building is cheerful, expansive and still has a wonderful staff." A staff member recently found a book to help Genevieve identify some unsigned paintings in her home.

For more than 15 years Genevieve has volunteered at the library, putting protective covers on new acquisitions. She loves getting a first look at what comes in.

When the donor wall goes up in the foyer of the library, the Goods will join the names of those who, throughout the library's history, have made gifts to ensure the future of this town treasure.

Girls making history one game at a time, sectional finals set for Friday

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High girls basketball team shouldn't have a problem getting fans anymore.

After winning 18 regular season games and the South Shore League title, the Skippers, a little surprised by their own success, hadn't really hit the mainstream yet.

After three tournament wins and a berth in tonight's Div. 4 South Sectional final against Millis, Cohasset is the talk of the town.

"It feels really good, all season we have been trying to get fans," said Skippers tri-captain Carly Salerno. "Finally we are getting people to come watch girls basketball, we are all really excited."

The Skippers will play tonight, Friday, March 7 at Braintree High School. Tip-off is scheduled for 6:00 p.m. The winner advances to the TD Banknorth Garden to play the winner of Manchester versus Mount Alvernia.

"I never expected to make it this far," said tri-captain Kayla Farren. "It's really exciting, I thought we would be better than

Roller coaster ride for boys

Three seniors graduate, strong core to return for hoops team

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Winning is contagious, as is losing. It's cyclical in sports and that is something the Cohasset High boys basketball learned this season.

The Skippers finished with a 7-13 overall mark, falling short of a berth in the Div. 4 South Sectionals. A mid-season losing streak cost the Skippers any hope of making the tourney. The roller coaster ride, if nothing else, is a solid learning tool going forward.

"We had a very up and down year," said Cohasset coach Dorian Bryant. "We got in a slump and we really couldn't get out of it."

Learning how to breakout of a rut will be important heading into next year.

"It all comes with experience, I hope next year we stay away from the injuries and losing three or four games in a row. The only way out of it is to be determined, come in next season and work hard."

Cohasset will graduate three seniors off this year's team, Kyle Pinkus, David Snowdale and Pat McCarthy. All three played important roles for the Skippers throughout their basketball careers.

Pinkus, a defensive stopper, is a strong all-around athlete that brings toughness to whatever sport he is playing.

"He was our defensive stopper and a good leader when he was with us," Bryant said.

Snowdale continued to play hard and lead for the Skippers through thick and thin.

"In practice and games he showed a lot of effort, passion and energy," Bryant said. "He always came to play and from that standpoint he did a nice job."

McCarthy provided offensive boost and showed a nice shooting touch all year. He averaged 11.5 points per game this season.

"He was probably our best scorer over the last three years," Bryant said. "He is a leader on the floor and played hard every game."

Cohasset should return a nice core of players next year led by South Shore League all star Dan Martin. The junior forward averaged 11 points, 12 rebounds and 3.4 blocks a game this season. His growth in the off-season will go a long way for how Cohasset does next year.

"Working in the off-season is the most important thing for him," Bryant said. "He really grew up towards the end of the season, he had a good season and could go farther than just high school (basketball), but that all depends on how hard he works at it."

Marcus Charles showed flashes of excellence and will be a much needed offensive threat next year. He must stay consistent.

"He played good defense and scored a little but he is streaky, he needs to be more consistent," Bryant said. "Overall his game helped us a lot this year."

Robert Jones and K.J. Pontes, both freshmen, will have to continue to grow up in a hurry next season. Both played big minutes as underclassmen, and the same should go for next year.

"Those are two guys that are going to be very nice players for us," Bryant said.

Jones played point guard against some of the best in the SSL. Next year he will look to take his place next to the top tier.

"Skill wise he is just as good as all the other guys in the league, he is just smaller right now," Bryant said.

Pontes will have to continue to utilize his athleticism and work on his game."He competes, works hard, loves the game and loves to play," Bryant said.

Senior Mike Wheeler has had a tremendous season for Hanover's first-ever indoor track team this winter. The talented sprinter started February off by winning the Division 4 State title in the 55 meters, running a personal best time of 6.56, which was just two one-hundredths of a second off the meet records. From there, Wheeler took third in the dash at the All-State Championships (6.57), qualifying for last Friday's New England Championships.

Coastal Nissan has donated $500 to the Hanover High School Athletic Fund in Mike Wheeler's name.

SPORTS BRIEFS

First and second grade Cohasset Youth Lacrosse Clinic

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse is sponsoring a clinic for boys and girls in the first and second grades to take place during the months of April and May of this year. There will be a total of six sessions of approximately one hour each to be held late Saturday afternoons at approximately 4 p.m. with three sessions each in April and May.

The goal of the sessions is to provide a skill focus atmosphere enhanced by fun activities so that all of the kids have a very positive experience and learn basic stick handling. There will be several coaches and small groups of kids for individual attention.

The sessions will be non-contact, although the boys will be required to wear regulation helmets and gloves and the girls regulation eye protection. There will be non-contact scrimmaging for both as the sessions progress. Cost of participation will be $125. That will include USLL membership for all players.

Registration and USLL forms will be available in the town hall outside the Recreation Department office starting Saturday, March 7th. Registrations are to be finalized by March 29th. All required forms must be submitted per the indicated address on the registration form in order to complete a registration. Additional information will be available in the town hall.

Nominees for the South Shore Athlete of the Month are chosen by sports editors from the following towns: Abington, Braintree, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Marshfield, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth. One student-athlete is chosen from the list of nominees as the South Shore Athlete of the Month. Coastal Nissan, sponsor of the South Shore Athlete of the Month, will present a check in the amount of $500 each month to the athletic department from the winning school.
Nominees for the month of February are: Abington: Brian Kurowski; Braintree: Blake Ellis; Cohasset: Jack Murphy; Hanover: Mike Wheeler; Hingham: Shauna McNiff; Marshfield: Joe Pronk; Norwell: Kristen Yen; Rockland: Courtney Burns; Scituate: Ethan Flood; Weymouth: Jake Harrison.
The Athlete of the Month for February is Mike Wheeler of Hanover.
Senior Mike Wheeler has had a tremendous season for Hanover's first-ever indoor track team this winter. The talented sprinter started February off by winning the Division 4 State title in the 55 meters, running a personal best time of 6.56, which was just two one-hundredths of a second off the meet record. From there, Wheeler took third in the dash at the All-State Championships (6.57), qualifying for last Friday's New England Championships. There, Wheeler ran a personal best 6.46 seconds to take second place.

The Coastal Stars nail playoff win

Set to play Norwood in next round

The Coastal Stars Squirt C1 started its playoff run with a decisive win over Hanover. The team started off very strong with a great first shift from Jack Kaetzer, Shane Rose and Joseph Cavanoro. This line had constant pressure on Hanover all game long.

The defense was similar to a brick wall with Jacob Latta and Andrew Julian both having outstanding games. Gus Conway and Derek McDermott also both played tough and provided some great protection for their goalie Tyler McKinnon.

The combo of great defense and brilliant goaltending held this offensive Hanover team to only one goal.

Olivia Leong scored first to put the Stars on the board with assists going to Colin McDonald and Jacob Latta. Olivia's line of Colin McDonald and Jessica Caldarola played with a lot of intensity and had some great passing.

The Stars second goal came from Jacob Latta rushing the puck up the ice around Hanover's Big D and scoring unassisted. Jack Kaetzer got a well deserved goal with assists going to Joseph Cavanaro and Shane Rose.

Joseph Cavanaro put in the Stars fourth goal with a great effort in front of the net unassisted. Jacob Latta added one more goal with the assist going to Jack Kaetzer. This was a very well placed shot to the far corner of the Hanover net.

Olivia Leong and Colin McDonald, along with Jessica Caldarola, scrambled in front of the net to put in the final goal. Olivia put this one upstairs in the net. It was a great looking goal with assists going to her linemates Colin and Jessica.

Matt Gorman along with Daniel Tobin and Connor Sheehy played hard all game both offensively and getting back to help out in the defensive zone.

Missing from the team against Hanover were Henry Decoste (out sick) and Alexandra Leahy (away for the weekend). Both players are tremendous assets to our team and will be back for next playoff game.

Playoff game number two is Sunday, March 9 versus Norwood. It will be played at the Hingham rink at 1:50 p.m.

Deep impact

last year but not make it to this game."

Understandably, Cohasset is a bit surprised by the amount of success to date. A 21-2 record and a No. 2 seed in the tournament are gaudy numbers. The team doesn't have a single senior, yet leadership has never been an issue. Maybe it's the never look beyond the next opponent mentality that has the Skippers humbled and honored to be in the south finals.

"We are taking it one game at a time," added Salerno. "We just have to play Cohasset ball."

Since John LeVangie came to coach five seasons ago the girls have qualified for the south sectionals every year.

"Coach LeVangie said that two years ago nobody knew about Cohasset girls hoops," Farren said. "It's nice to prove a point that we are someone, although we are a small school. We're the underdogs."

Two seasons ago the Skippers made the south sectional semifinals, but this is the farthest any girls team has gone since a state title run in the late 1980's.

"This is completely unexpected based on our season last year, but not on the work ethic of these girls," LeVangie said. "It's been a pleasant surprise, but to be with them for two hours a day six days a week is the real pleasure. They're good ball players but more important they're quality people."

Youth may be the most underrated asset for the Skippers. Salerno, Farren and Sammi Lehr may be the captains, but the every starter philosophy instills a team attitude. That hasn't been compromised, and judging by recent success, it won't be anytime soon.

"We've had the best team chemistry since I've been on the team," Salerno said. "Everyone is a leader on this team, we work so well on and off the court."

Millis, the not so surprising No. 16 seed, hails from the ultra competitive Tri-Valley Conference. The Mohawks qualified with a 9-11 record, and since have beaten No. 1 Sacred Heart, No. 8 South Shore Christian and No. 5 Chatham.

LeVangie noted earlier that seeding doesn't matter in the tournament. Millis has proved that theory. For one, overall records don't matter when you play in a weaker conference. That's why Cohasset is a solid No. 2 out of the Div. 3 top heavy, South Shore League.

"Coach LeVangie said that two years ago nobody knew about Cohasset girls hoops. It's nice to prove a point that we are someone, although we are a small school. We're the underdogs."
Kayla Farren

The key Friday will be to shut down the Mohawks Laura Ingraham. The junior has already scored 1,000-career points. She dropped 31 points on Chatham in the semifinals.

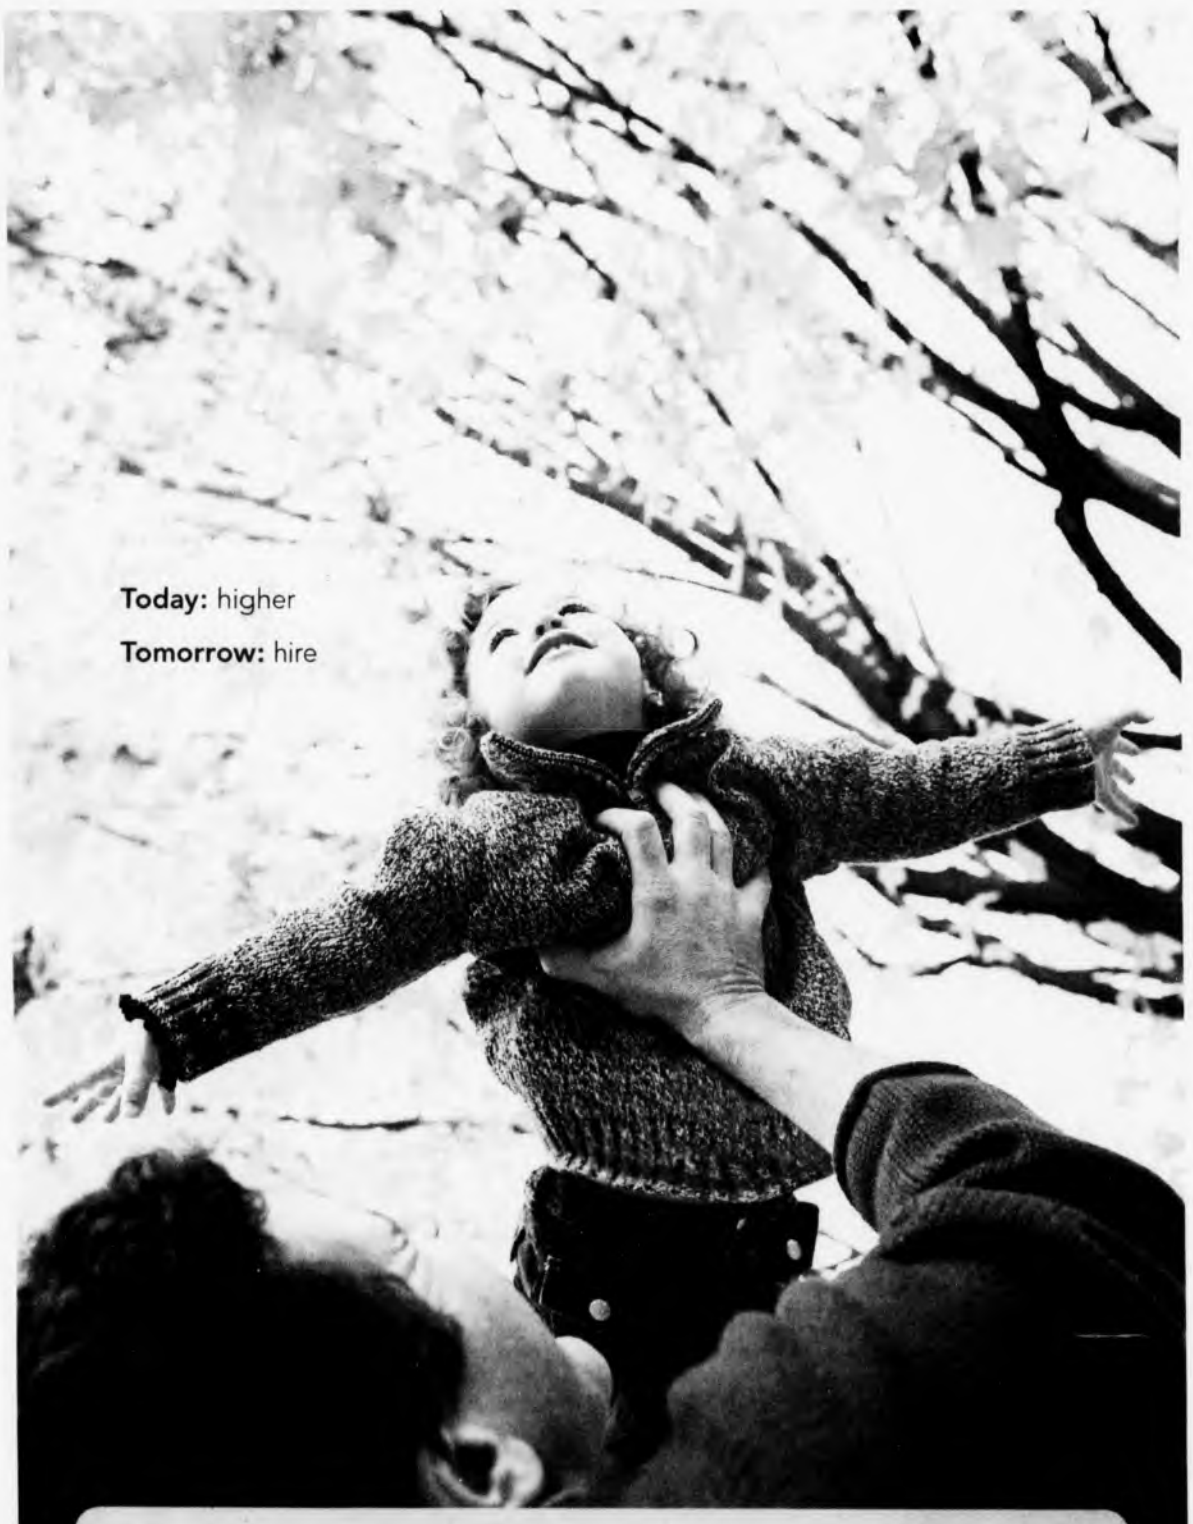
"They are a very scrappy team," added LeVangie.

Cohasset 52, Nantucket 32

It was Meredith Kelly's night to shine against the Whalers. The sophomore forward played shut down defense on Nantucket star Angela Patterson and added 16 points in the win.

"Patterson usually scores over 20 points a game and Meredith held her to under five," Farren said. "She played great defense and really helped us."

Salerno agreed.



"She had an amazing game, she really played great defense," Salerno said.

Sammi Lehr played tough inside scoring 16 points. Cohasset led 24-12 at halftime and controlled play for most of the game.

Cohasset 55, West Bridgewater 31

Cohasset knocked off West Bridgewater in the quarterfinals with relative ease. It was the second time the Skippers had their way with the Wildcats, a tourney tested group on their own.

Both Sammi and Tori Lehr led, combining for 31 points. They continue to set the tone in the paint.

Some tips for 'know-it-alls'

AAUW CORNER

GWEN SAYIAN

The most recent AAUW meeting featured a presentation on the importance of humor in everyday life by Barbara Tortarella, an area social worker. As I listened to her, it struck me that a humorous outlook is the ticket to getting through a day in the office, especially when you have to deal with know-it-alls and busybodies. We all know a few. Maybe you have earned the title yourself. In my years, I've crossed over a few times, to excel in both categories.

The first house my husband and I bought didn't have a dishwasher. So my husband and father-in-law decided to install one themselves. Both of these men were quite competent with cranky washing machines and dispirited dryers, so the installation of a dishwasher was a reasonable goal. Several hours into the job, my dear father-in-law left abruptly. "He was "tired," my husband told me. After a respectable amount of time had passed, I learned that I had been very concerned with water in the pipes, and for some reason fancied myself a dishwasher wizard, driving him to distraction. A smart man, he knew when it was time to leave. That's when I realized that we are all capable of know-it-allness. It reminds me of the age old question: can a good human being be driven to kill?

A social worker by profession, I recently decided to take a break from people problems by diving headfirst into the world of paper problems; bookkeeping to be precise. I've never done office work before. At first, I was completely befuddled by my adding machine. But we're on much better terms now.

It's the office know-it-all that really makes my day. Whatever my current dilemma is she is right there to do everything for me, adding a lengthy tutorial on her vast years of experience. It takes my breath away sometimes. When I told her I didn't know how to work the automatic coffee maker, she moved in quickly, bumping me out of the way, and took over. That was great because I really don't want to make the coffee. I only want to drink it. When I have a problem with my computer, she hustles right over, almost sits on my lap, and clicks wildly around the screen. She opens and closes things so quickly, it looks like a laser light show right there on my desk.

Ultimately, she'll announce my system is "configured differently than hers and it can't be done," whatever it was that I was trying to do. I'm going to use that next time I have to fill out a new form for the IRS. I'll simply explain, "The configuration is different than my system, and it can't be done." When I worked for the state government, we didn't make "mistakes." "Oversights occurred" instead. Next time I forget to buy snacks before a big game, I'll announce it as an "oversight." Wish me luck.

In defense of know-it-alls, they often do know a lot. My office mate has been very helpful with some things. It's the manner in which the expertise is delivered that is defining. It's the quick, overly decisive reaction to the issue at hand, and a take-over style that sets the true animal apart. Don't confuse the know-it-all with the busybody, though. They appear the same initially; however the busybody has little or no expertise in the area of question, only great energy and astounding stamina in finding a resolution. The key difference between them is that a know-it-all may be helpful, while a busybody is rarely helpful, as illustrated in the previously mentioned dishwasher episode.

So how do you handle these highly energized people? If you have just identified yourself as a know-it-all, I urge you to learn even more, because sometimes you are helpful, and you could even be more helpful. Just slow down a bit, and try adding a "What do you think?" occasionally.

If you're more of a busybody, exploring an engaging hobby might be a good outlet for your enthusiasm. Try to pick something with a national convention since these are usually held in large hotels where you'll have plenty of space in which to dash around and expound whatever knowledge you think you have. As for the rest of us, Barbara Tortarella, our recent presenter, might recommend a deep breath and a sense of humor. Remember, you only want to get a cup of coffee, not to learn how to make it.

Our next AAUW presentation, which is free and open to the public, will be March 11, at 7 p.m., at Thayer Public Library, Braintree. The 19th century saw many changes in the way woman experienced and understood their place in everyday life. Dr. Margaret Lamberts Bendroth, historian, author and executive director of the Congregational Library in Boston, will speak on how these women's aspirations shaped feminism and social change in America.

Holders of associate's or bachelor's degrees who live in the South Shore towns from Plymouth to Quincy are welcome to join the Hingham Area Branch. To learn more about AAUW, call Patricia McKay at 781-337-3375 or email: hollie@gallivan.org. Visit the branch Web site at aauw-ma.org and follow the links to the Hingham Branch.

AAUW to present program on '19th Century Woman'

Hingham Area Branch of the American Association of University Women will present a program titled "The 19th Century Woman: a Historian's View From the 21st Century" at 7 p.m., on March 11. This is free and open to the public. The program will be at Thayer Public Library, Logan Auditorium, second floor, 798 Washington St., Braintree.

Margaret Lamberts Bendroth – historian, author and executive director of the Congregational Library, Boston, will be the featured speaker. The 19th century saw many changes in the way women experienced and understood their place in everyday life. Hear Bendroth speak on how these women's aspirations shaped the forces of feminism and social change in America.

Bendroth is the author of several books including: "Fundamentalism & Gender, 1875 to the Present," "Growing up Protestant: Parents, Children, and Mainline Churches" and "Fundamentalists in the City: Conflict and Division in Boston's Churches, 1885-1950." She has written numerous articles on women and, religion. Before coming to the Congregational Library, Bendroth served as professor of history at Calvin College in Michigan specializing in 20th century history, women's history and the history of American religion. She has taught courses in the Beacon Hill Seminars program, Boston Center for Adult Education, Northeastern, and Andover-Newton Theological School.

Bendroth received her bachelor of art's degree in history from Cornell, her master of arts degree in church history from Trinity Evangelical Divinity School and her doctorate degree in American history from Johns Hopkins.

Hingham Area Branch of the American Association of University Women seeks and welcomes new members from the South Shore area who hold an associate or equivalent, or baccalaureate or higher degree from a qualified educational institution. Undergraduates may join the branch as AAUW student affiliates. AAUW members believe in the power of education to change women's lives.

LIFE AT CHS

Yes, the Cohasset Girls Varsity Basketball team has jump shot its way to an outstanding season.

Forget the NBA; this year CHS is possibly home to some future female Michael Jordans. Yes, the Cohasset Girls Varsity Basketball team has jump shot its way to an outstanding season. Monday established the near pinnacle of their athletic triumph as they squashed Nantucket 52-32 in the Division 4 South Shore Semi Finals. Consequently, the girls will play Millis on Friday for a chance to dominate and thus continue their road to a championship title by playing next Tuesday at TD Banknorth Garden…. What an exciting prospect! Good Luck ladies.

On Thursday, kids from all grades showed their hunger for art by competing in the annual "Eat Your Art" competition. With the guidance and creativity of high school art teacher, Ms. Berkowitz, students were given the chance to create masterpieces out of ALL edible foods. If your child suffered from never ending stickiness and sugar rushes, then rest assured it was all in the name of art! Also, the National Honor Society has setup a food fund and a drop off box for all donated goods in the High School office. The person who brings in the most donations (of food) will be awarded a prize! The contributions will help out the Cohasset Food Pantry.

In other "news," this week was shortened thanks to those oh-so-convenient Professional Days. With only a three and a half day school week, kids tried their best to hold back their anticipation. What is proving to be more thrilling is the prospect of summer vacation a mere three months away…. let's try and keep it together until then! All we need now is a little bit of sunshine to incubate an outbreak of Spring fever!

Now, for the week's top stories:

- Monday: As mentioned above, the girl's basketball team played and won against Nantucket.
- Tuesday: Excitement grew as both "Eat Your Art" and a the promise of a long weekend grew closer!
- Wednesday: New NHS inductees met after school to host their elections for next year's President, Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer positions.
- Thursday: A much needed half-day!
- Friday: No School!

That's it for me this week! Have a great weekend.

Cohasset High advances to semifinals in State Drama Festival

Last Saturday in Attleboro, nine students from Cohasset High School took the stage to present their one-act play, "A Whole New You" in the Massachusetts High School Drama Festival. Seven other schools were assigned to that site to present their works, including Acton-Boxborough RHS, Attleboro HS, Catholic Memorial, Marian HS, Montrose School, Newton Country Day School and Wilbraham & Monson Academy. At the end of a very long but exciting day, the Cohasset cast was rewarded by being selected as one of three plays to move on to the semifinal round on March 15.

According to director Stephanie Noble, the cast was nervous as they gathered their props and prepared the stage but once dialogue began and got their first laugh they knew they had something special. "Every thought, every movement and gesture was spot on. The cast took what they rehearsed and delivered it like pros. It's not easy to get to this point but cast members worked together and listened to each others ideas and suggestions and brought this work to life."

This year, 118 high schools from around the state competed in the prestigious festival that is celebrating its 77th year. From last week's preliminary round, 42 schools have been selected to advance to the semifinals.

"Our cast lit up that stage and had the audience in the palm of their hand," said co-director Barbara Baumgarten. "Each one brought great energy and something new to their performance that day. It was a thrilling moment when they announced our name as a semifinalist, I think we all exploded. I am so proud of them and I can't wait for them to move on."

The cast of "A Whole New You" by Alan Haehnel includes in order of appearance: Tara Goodwin as Ms. Fowler, Sally Meehan as Sandy, Andrew Bell as Dad, Logan Pratt as Option One and Mom, Natalie Dignam as Ms. Chichester, Greta Shwachman as Option Two and Option Four, Mark Seraikas as Roger, Lauren Mack as Option Three, and Ellie Baumgarten as Miss Florem.

The cast of the Cohasset HS production of "A Whole New You" is all smiles after their winning performance at the Massachusetts Drama Festival.

"We are honored, yet humbled to be in the next round with some large schools with distinguished and legendary drama programs."

— Stephanie Noble, director

"This is a big deal and very important to us," adds Noble. "We are honored, yet humbled to be in the next round with some large schools with distinguished and legendary drama programs. We will take a close look at what we presented last week and try to incorporate the judges' comments to improve. We may be little but we've got heart and talent to boot."

Decals honor Tim Mahoney

The Cohasset Fire Department is selling blue and white decals featuring Tim Mahoney's initials and the No. 9, which was Tim's jersey number for both the hockey and lacrosse teams at Scituate High where he was a sophomore.

Tim's father, Frank Mahoney, is a Cohasset Fire Captain.

The decals, which sell for $5 each, are available at the Cohasset Fire Headquarters on Elm Street or by calling 781-383-0616. (Please note, an incorrect phone number was provided last week).

Every dollar we take in will go to the Timothy J. Mahoney Mem-orial Fund, which has been set up at Scituate Federal Savings Bank, 72 Front St., Scituate, MA 02066.

Tim, 16, was killed in a single-car accident Feb. 2 on Route 3A between Mendel Road and Pond Street. The driver, Chris Barrow, 18, and a senior at Scituate High, remains hospitalized.

The decals are available for $5 each at the fire department on Elm Street.

Rev. Liz Walker to speak at New North

The Rev. Liz Walker, the former WBZ-TV news anchor, is coming to Hingham's New North Church on Palm Sunday, March 16, to speak about her humanitarian work in Darfur.

Rev. Walker will preach the sermon at New North's 10:30 a.m. service. The entire community is welcome to come h ar her at the Palm Sunday service, which wil' feature the music of South Shore trumpet soloist Ted Haines.

Following the service, at noon, Rev. Walker will speak and show some of her video work on Darfur at a special luncheon in the second floor ballroom of New North's parish house wing. People who cannot attend the service but would like to come to the luncheon talk are welcome to do so, but to help with planning it is requested a reservation be made by calling the church at 781-749-2341 or by registering online at newnorthchurch-hingham.org. There is no charge for the luncheon, though attendees will be requested to make voluntary donations to My Sister's Keeper, a relief organization co-founded by Rev. Walker.

Rev. Walker is an ordained elder at Bethel African Methodist Episcopal church in Jamaica Plain, where she leads the youth worship ministry. Prior to taking up her ministry, she worked at WBZ News for 21 years and was recognized as one of Boston's most popular television journalists.

In the summer of 2001, Rev. Walker traveled with Bethel pastors Ray and Gloria Hammond on a fact-finding mission on the controversial slave trade in Sudan in East Africa. Moved by the human rights atrocities she witnessed there, Rev. Walker co-founded the humanitarian organization "My Sister's Keeper," which focuses on providing advocacy and support for economic and educational initiatives in Sudan.

Rev. Walker shot her own video footage during that first journey and produced a number of television specials including one that earned the Edward R. Murrow Award from the New England Radio Television News Director's Association in 2002. She has since returned to Sudan a number of times and has completed a new documentary titled "A Glory from the God," which profiles Reverend Gloria's leadership in the movement to end genocide in Darfur.

Riders In The Sky May 30 — Robert Bernhardt, conductor

Riders In The Sky have been romancing audiences with the whimsical folk music and way-out wit of the American cowboy since 1977. Hear this legendary band's crafted classic and original western songs, transformed into smooth acoustic harmony — and outrageous humor. Slapstick comedy and stellar tunes combine to make the perfect blend of family entertainment for all ages.

Gospel Night Oleta Adams May 31 — Charles Floyd, conductor

The fantastic all-volunteer choir that "raised the rafters and made spirits soar" (Boston Globe) returns to the Pops for its 15th year. Accompanied by special guest singer and multiple Grammy® nominee Oleta Adams, the Boston Pops Gospel Choir will leave you flying high with the power and elation of their signature Gospel sound.

JazzFest June 10-11 (8pm) & June 21 (8pm) & June 22 (7:30pm) — Jeff Tyzik, conductor (Jun 10-11); Keith Lockhart, conductor(Jun 21-22)

The Dizzy Gillespie All Stars' Symphony Sessions (June 21–22), with James Moody, Slide Hampton, Claudio Roditi, John Lee, Lewis Nash, and Roy Asaf continue the master trumpet player's legacy. Along with the Afro-Cuban spirit of Arturo Sandoval (June 10–11), these artists carry the soul of jazz into a promising future. After each JazzFest concert, hear the latest rising stars on the international jazz scene, presented by Berklee College of Music.

A Little Night Music June 12-14 — Keith Lockhart, conductor

One of Broadway's most overlooked masterpieces, this romantic and achingly beautiful musical deals with the universal subject of love, in all its wondrous, humorous, and ironic permutations. Set to the elegant flow of a waltz and inspired by Ravel, Stephen Sondheim's score, which includes "Send In the Clowns," is brought to life by a Broadway cast including Christine Ebersole, Ron Raines, and Mary Louise Wilson collaborating with Fellows of the Tanglewood Music Center.

Broadway's Leading Man June 17-18 — Keith Lockhart, conductor

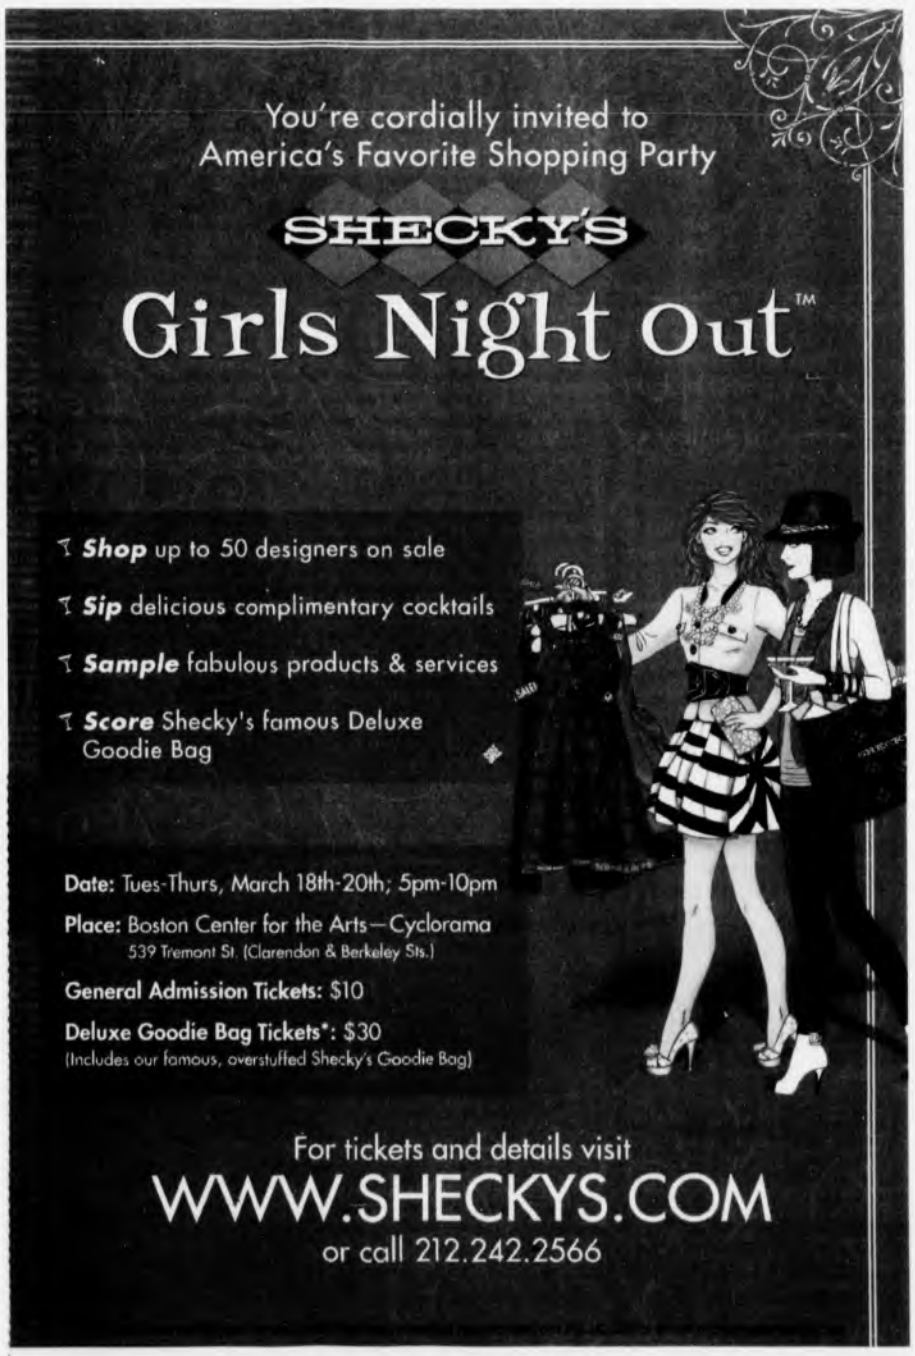
Named the "The Last Leading Man" by The New York Times, Brian Stokes Mitchell has enjoyed an astonishingly successful career that has taken him around the world in Broadway performances including Man of La Mancha, Kiss Me Kate, and Ragtime. See this award-winning singer perform an impressive repertoire of classics and new songs from his recently released self-titled album.

EdgeFest Amanda Palmer June 19-20 — Keith Lockhart, conductor

Theatrical-rock, manic-musical, neo-glam... With their national cult following, The Dresden Dolls duo has defied genre and explanation with their experiments in harmony, narrative, and dark melodrama. In this special presentation by the Dresden Dolls' Amanda Palmer, classic orchestra and punk cabaret collide to take her goth performance art to a new level. After each EdgeFest concert, hear the best of today's emerging talent.

Judy Garland... A Life on Stage
June 28 (8pm) & 29 (7:30pm) — Doug Katsaros, conductor

The legendary voice of Judy and the symphonic sound of the Boston Pops combine in this remarkable concert event to present her dynamic life in song. Breakthrough technology allows a seamless blend of historic visual footage and film with her own vocals, accompanied by the orchestra playing classic arrangements of her iconic songs. Share in the timeless classic that is Judy Garland...a life on stage.



Take Me Out to the Ball Game July 1-2 — Keith Lockhart, conductor

Celebrating the 100th Anniversary of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," the Boston Pops brings the sound of the stadium to the stage in this celebration of the National Baseball Hall of Fame. Hear classic baseball-inspired songs, including "The National Game," by John Philip Sousa, and the soundtrack from Field of Dreams. Music, images, stories, and video combine to pay a spectacular tribute to America's favorite pastime.

Mountain magic at Sugarloaf in Maine

Nancy Olesin
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

CARRABASSETT VALLEY, Maine -

Sugarloaf is far into Maine, about 260 miles from the Boston area, but come here and you'll be skiing without all those beautiful people (i.e., New Yorkers) who infest tonier big mountain resorts like Killington and Stowe. That in itself is worth the trip.

So is the fact Sugarloaf is the state's highest skiable peak and has choice snow conditions well into the month of April.

What you get here is a friendly, family destination with great skiing.

Rising from the Carrabassett Valley, the central Maine resort has trails and glades challenging enough for the best hotshots. Sugarloaf has the only lift-serviced, above-treeline skiing in the East. Ride the Timberline Quad lift for a 360-degree view from the top where you can see as far as Mount Washington in New Hampshire or across to Mount Katahdin, Maine's highest peak. Experts will cherish skiing the ungroomed Snowfields, although they're sometimes closed because of high winds.

Make no mistake, Sugarloaf is a big mountain. There's also plenty of beginner and intermediate terrain to please those just getting started skiing or looking to improve. Easier trails like Timberline give even beginners a chance to ski from the summit. And, unlike mega-resorts where the trails are spread out over several mountains, all 134 trails here lead to the lodge. It's perfect for families trying to reconnect while not necessarily skiing together.

A snowboarder carves the freshly groomed corduroy.

To ski in New England is to be prepared for icy terrain, but the area's snow making (95 percent) and grooming is impressive. The payoff is that lift lines are short or non-existent. And the friendly atmosphere extends to the lifties" who all seemed to have a friendly word when my family of six (four skiers and two snowboarders) visited for a long weekend.

A bit rusty? Take a 90-minute "Learn to Turn" clinic lesson, included with many ski-and-stay packages. Veteran instructors like Kevin Casey can teach you how to use your skis' edges to your best advantage. Casey's advice helped build my confidence about skiing on steeper and icier terrain. One exercise, which involved holding your poles in front of you and handing them from left to right and back during a turn, really helped me improve my turns.

Expert snowboarders play and ride in The Yard, opened just last year. At more than 400 feet wide and a half-mile long, it also has a SuperPipe with 21-foot-high walls for Olympic-style contests. Meanwhile, the Stomping Grounds has a MiniPipe and a series of smaller features, rails and jumps that are best for working on the fundamentals of freestyle park riding.

While the resort has traditional hotel rooms, you can also opt for a condo. We stayed in a three-bedroom condo out of the hubbub of the main lodge area. Just yards from the base of the Snubber lift, it was private and had easy trail access. And the condo came with a fireplace in a cozy living area and a well-equipped kitchen where we made some of our own easy meals, like spaghetti and chili.

But don't miss eating at one of the resort's restaurants. The Shipyard Brew Haus (207-237-6837; main courses from $9.95 to $20) has seating with comfy upholstered armchairs in the "Living Room" or at picnic tables near the bar. When we dined, folk musicians Uncle Al and Kenny were performing songs by Dylan and Simon and Garfunkel. Try the Sesame Seared Beef with Spicy Thai Orange Ginger or a burger sprinkled with Montreal seasoning, and accompany it with a beer brewed in Portland. Desserts, like Peanut Butter and Chocolate Ooey Goooey Cake, were as good as they sound and large enough to share.

In the main lodge in the Village Center, have lunch in the Narrow Gauge Cafe, which has hearty choices like pulled pork and chicken sandwiches and broccoli cheddar cheese soup.

The dress code at Sugarloaf is casual, but at The Rack, flannel shirts might be required. Located on the access road just as you enter the resort, it's a fun spot with some of the best pork ribs (207-237-2211; a half-rack is $14.95) I've tasted. If ribs aren't your thing, try one of several Angus beef burgers, chicken dishes or the standout nachos piled high with chili, cheese and veggies. After the lifts close late Sunday afternoon, the entertainment starts with The Steves, made up of a bunch of guys named Steve, who play until about 7:30. When was the last time you heard the '70s country anthem Up Against the Wall Redneck Mother"? Yep, it's that kind of rockin' place.

You can also get into the center of the action by taking the free shuttle to the Village Center where there's food and nightly music in the Widowmaker Lounge.

Find time during your stay to take a swim and a soak in the condo's neighborhood recreational center (for condo residents only). With a warm indoor pool, three hot tubs and a Swedish sauna, it was a relaxing retreat for the adults in our group after the drive from Boston and a great way for the kids to blow off steam.

As another water option open to everyone, the Sugarloaf Fitness Center in the Village Center has a large pool and indoor hot tubs (as well as up-to-date weight training equipment, saunas and, on the lower level, racquetball or wallyball for $15 an hour). But the real treat is to soak in one of the outdoor hot tubs at night and see the stars sparkling like diamonds in the black sky.

Oversized martinis are among the attractions at Mystic's Bravo Bravo. The restaurant also gets raves for its Italian bistro fare.

Head to Mystic for Italian fare and seafaring tradition

Julie Hatfield
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Mystic, Conn. -

You would expect, arriving hungry in Mystic, Conn., the historic seafaring place, to order a big bowl of clam chowder and a hunk of broiled cod.

That's available, of course, in a town that is home to the world's largest maritime museum and a wonderful collection of preserved sailing ships and memorabilia. But you shouldn't bother with seafood, because the best restaurant in town is an Italian bistro.

Bravo Bravo on Main Street in the center of town, is a small, cozy, upscale restaurant that Zagat says is ``better than most New York restaurants." And they are right.

Located in front of the hodgepodge Whalers Inn - a good place to overnight - Bravo Bravo's bar serves oversized martinis, and its dining room of about a dozen tables fills up instantly every night it's open because the food is that wonderful.

Appetizers - most of which are built into pretty, gravity-defying architectural structures - include polenta torte with sun-dried tomato pesto, goat cheese and roast vegetables ($8.95) and baked mozzarella layered between croutons topped with a savory garlic sauce for the same price.

Entrees can be anything from champagne risotto with lobster and asparagus ($19.95) to stuffed veal medallion with a garlic spinach cheese in a shiitake mushroom sauce ($21.95).

IN NEW ENGLAND

It is absolutely essential to make reservations for this popular place, which sits alongside big picture windows where diners can see and be seen.

While in Mystic, don't miss the chance to sample the pizzas at Mystic Pizza, the pizzeria made famous by the 1988 Julia Roberts movie of the same name, where crowds still line up outside every lunchtime for their little slice of heaven.

Spend time inside Mystic Seaport and you'll feel you have moved back to a 19th century seafaring village, or drive a half hour or so and do some 21st century gaming at Foxwoods or Mohegan Sun casinos.

Mystic is about 99 miles from Boston, on I-95 South to Exit 90 in Connecticut. For more information on Bravo Bravo in the Whalers Inn, call 860-536-3228. Rooms at the Whalers Inn are $105-$259 per night (www.whalersinnmystic.com; or 800-243-2588).

Tubing: Not a skier or rider? For $15, try slidin' downhill on a cushioned doughnut. With its own handle-tow lift, the Turbo Tubing Park has four 1,000-foot shoots off the lower mountain. It's open 5 to 8 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and 4 to 6 and 7 to 9 p.m. on Saturdays.

Cross-Country: Trek through the woods on the cross-country trails at the Sugarloaf Outdoor Center. Trade in your same-day downhill lift ticket for a free Nordic trail pass and equipment any time before 3:30 p.m. Otherwise, Nordic passes cost $17 for adults, $10 for kids 6-12 and free if you're 5 or younger.

About a mile from the main resort area, the center has both classic Nordic and the newer skiskating style equipment that takes a bit more skill. For novices, there's plenty of easy beginner trails that offer a great aerobic workout. With 105 km (about 63 miles) of groomed trail loops, the area also attracts advanced Nordic skiers. A hawk may fly across the trail as you ski through quiet woods.

Snowshoes and skates: Snap on snowshoes ($20 rental) and take one of the Nordic trail loops at a slower pace. If it's cold enough for hard ice, take a spin afterward on the new outdoor rink. Skate rentals are $7.

Antigravity: The Carrabassett Valley Antigravity Complex (207-237-5566) has nothing to do with NASA's space program but everything to do with family fun. The facility, near the access road to Sugarloaf, was developed by the town of Carrabassett Valley and Carrabassett Valley Academy, whose alumni includes Olympic skier Bode Miller (Class of 1996). Challenge yourself on the rock-climbing wall, jump on the two Olympic-size trampolines or run on the indoor track. There's a weight room, fitness classes and a skate park with a 10-foot-deep bowl as well. Although the hours are limited (be sure to call ahead to make reservations), most activities cost $5 for kids and $8 for adults.

IF YOU go...

Getting there: Sugarloaf is near Kingfield, Maine, about 4-1/2-hours from the Boston area.

Staying there: Ski & Stay packages, which include lodging and lifts but not downhill rentals, start at $99 a night per person.

Skiing there: If you're staying elsewhere, a full-day alpine lift ticket at Sugarloaf (Feb. 16-March 30) is $72 for adults 19+; $61 for ages 13-18; $49 for ages 6-12; and free for children 5 and younger. After March 30, lift ticket prices are reduced.

Summer Fun: Sugarloaf is a four-season resort. The resort's golf course has been ranked No. 1 for the past five years by Golf Digest magazine. In warmer weather, try fly-fishing, take a moose tour, hike or go mountain biking. The resort is just off the Appalachian Trail.

SPORTS FANS

New England Revolution soccer star, Taylor Twellman, is surrounded by Cohasset athletes, Megan Richardson, Dominque Rioux, and Charlotte Malone during the grand opening of the CATZ Sports Performance Center, 35 Pond Park Dr., in Hingham last week. Originally launched in California to train high-profile athletes, CATZ has adapted its sports-training philosophy for aspiring young athletes.

Abbey to exhibit at New England Flower Show

For the first time in its history, Glastonbury Abbey, a community of Benedictine monks, in Hingham, has entered an exhibit in the New England Flower Show March 8 through 16 at Bay State Exposition Center, Boston.

The Abbey exhibit, titled "An Invitation to the Bell," will feature its historic bell tower, an actual herb garden and a variety of plants and trees, all symbolic of its site on 60 acres on a Hingham hillside, just off the intersection of Routes 3A South and 228.

The exhibit has been designed and constructed by volunteer members of the Abbey worshipping community which includes Frances O'Toole, a flower show past award winner, Tess Simkus, a potter and Montessori school teacher, co-chairwomen; Nancy Cusack, a professor at Massachusetts College of Art and Design, John Doolan, a Scituate/Norwell contractor, and Jan Doucette, an industrial designer. Many other Abbey people have helped with their time and expertise.

The Abbey tower was constructed in 1920 by an Irish mason, Moriarty, for William Skilton, a wool merchant from Boston, who used it to look out over the nearby Atlantic Ocean and also for summer entertaining. In the Abbey's early years, the space was used by the monks for daily prayer but has since remained as a symbol of the Abbey's roots in Glastonbury Abbey, Somerset, England, where the monastery was a haven for visitors seeking serenity, healing and solace in a chaotic world.

The Abbey also offers a complete bookstore, the only one of its kind in the area, which offers a full range of titles across faiths and practices including spiritual, philosophical and inspirational, children's books, stationery, CDs, and a variety of religious gift jewelry and other items.

Founded in 1954, the Abbey conducts religious and other retreats at its two retreat houses, Stonecrest and the Whiting House, and also offers its accommodations to individuals and groups as a place for short, quiet respites. Its Abbey Center is a separate conference center available to large and small groups, business, educational and private, for meetings, luncheons and other gatherings.

Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St. 781-383-0808. Interim Pastor: Richard Chamberlain; Please join us for Sunday Service and Sunday School at 10 a.m. followed by fellowship in Merritt Hall. Accepting donations of new socks for homeless shelters and non-perishable food items for local food pantries.

Bible Study series continues on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Practical Christianity. Some Christians commonly view the Old Testament as a storybook-full of fascinating tales, yet ancient and irrelevant to modern reality. This exceptional 10-week study from Insight For Living with Chuck Swindoll will help you blow the dust off these timeworn chronicles and discover enduring truths that relate directly to you, while translating into reliable patterns for godly living. Experience familiar passages as never before, and find fresh inspiration in the memorable scenes revisited. Follow the examples of faithful Old Testament heroes such as Abraham, Joseph, David, and many others as you learn to apply timeless biblical principles to your everyday life. Please join us.

Our mission statement is: "Equipping God's people for living out the Good News to be the hands, feet, voice and heart of Christ in our community and in the world." How should we accomplish this? Come hear sermons to find out.

Obituaries

Diane E. Seppala

Gallery artists, landscape designer and expert gardener

Diane E. (Waid) Seppala, 65, of Duxbury, died at the Kidndred Hospital Northeast in Braintree on Sunday Dec. 30, 2007 from complication of Eastern Equine Encephalitis infection.

She was born in Hackensack, N.J. and was raised in Braintree and graduated from Braintree High School. She attended the Massachusetts College of Art in Boston for several years. She was an artist who painted in oil and also mixed media. She prepared collages among other works.

Mrs. Seppala was a gallery artist who had won many prizes and awards. She was associated with the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset. She was a landscape designer and an expert gardener.

She leaves her husband James W. Seppala; two sons: James P. Seppala married to Liane Seppala of Cohasset and Paul David Seppala married to Holly Seppala of Effingham, N.H. She also leaves two grandchildren Axel Seppala and Dagmar Seppala of Cohasset.

A memorial service is being planned for the spring.

Arrangements are by the Mortimer N. Peck-Russell Peck Funeral Chapels Inc. of Braintree and Weymouth.

Memorial Donations may be sent to the charity of the donor's choice.

Dorothy DiTullio

Grandmother

Dorothy "Dottie" DiTullio, 77, of Cohasset, died March 5, 2008, at her home.

Mrs. DiTullio will be remembered by many good friends on the South Shore and in Naples, Fla., for her caring nature. Throughout her year-long struggle with lung cancer, she remained bright, hopeful and affirmed the gift of life.

She leaves her children, Lisa DiTullio and her husband, George Martinez, of Cohasset, Bobby Lewis DiTullio of New Orleans, La., and Janine DiTullio of New York, N.Y.; her grandchildren, Kaleigh and Geoffrey; and her nieces Mimi, Tishy and Kathy.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated on Saturday, March 8, at St. Anthony Church, Cohasset, at a time to be announced. Visiting hours will be from 4 to 8 p.m., on Friday, March 7, at McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, memorial donations may be made to the LUNGevity Foundation, 2421 North Ashland Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60614.

To sign the online guest book, visit www.mcnamara-sparrell.com.

Worship Notes

Pianist Elaine Kwon to play concert at St. Stephen's

St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset will be presenting New York pianist Elaine Kwon in recital on the Palm Sunday, March 16, at 3 p.m.. Prize-winning Kwon, DMA, has performed solo and chamber concerts throughout the US, Canada, and Asia. Most recent performances in New York include artist composed and choreographed productions and venues at the Angel Orensanz Theater and Lincoln Center, and a program at Carnegie Hall is in preparation. Dr. Kwon is an Affiliated Artist at MIT in Cambridge, and Ambassador of the Women's World Conference to be held in Bulgaria. Her website is www.elainekwon.com. Elaine has won many prizes in the area of Tai Kwon Do, and had appeared on the Oprah Winfrey Show, as well as hosting her New York television series. Dr. Kwon is known for her clarity in performance and her great technical skill – this is a program not to miss!

The recital will be held in the Music Room at St. Stephen's and will be introduced by music director of the parish, David Baker. A reception will follow the program.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., is handicap accessible, and plenty of parking is available at the village car park. Admission is free, but donations will be accepted. For information, please call 781.383.1083.

Braintree Forum, Cohasset Mariner, Duxbury Reporter, Hanover Mariner, Hingham Journal, Kingston Mariner, Marshfield Mariner, Norwell Mariner, Old Colony Memorial, Pembroke Mariner & Reporter, Plymouth Bulletin, Scituate Mariner, Wareham Courier, Weymouth News

We know there are many bright, talented and caring young adults in our communities, and this year, a special section entitled "The Best & The Brightest" will appear in the COHASSET MARINER to celebrate their accomplishments.

Please help us find these remarkable teens and young adults by filling out the nomination form on this page. You can nominate an individual between the ages of 16 and 21 who, you believe, deserves to be honored, whether it be for academic achievement, volunteerism, athletics, artistic acumen or the pursuit of excellence in another field. Here's your opportunity to get involved.

You can bring the form to the Community Newspaper Company office at 182 Standish Ave., Plymouth, MA 02360 or mail the form to Beth Doyle, or fax the form to 508-591-6601.

All entries will be considered by a selection panel, and successful nominees will be interviewed and photographed. During the week of May 26th, Community Newspaper Company will include "The Best & The Brightest," a special section devoted to sharing as many of the stories and photographs of those nominated as possible.

'Tomorrows' history

Foxboro girl is the youngest member of 'Annie' 30th anniversary tour

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Abby Spare says history is her favorite subject at the Charles Taylor Elementary School in Foxboro. These days, however, the fourth grader isn't just studying history, she's also making a little of her own as the youngest performer in the 30th anniversary national tour of "Annie," which comes to Boston's Wang Theatre March 25-30.

"I'm having a lot of fun with my character, Tessie, who is a cry-baby who whines about everything. It is really fun to play someone else," explained Spare last week by telephone from Washington, D.C. "It was a dream of mine to do something like this, but I never thought it would actually happen."

Abby Spare of Foxboro, plays Tessie in "Annie" coming to the Citi Performing Arts Center Wang Theatre in Boston March 25-30.

Abby Spare (Tessie), of Foxboro, located in the center, performs in the national tour of "Annie."

Prior to being cast in the national tour of the musical that won seven 1977 Tony Awards including Best Musical, Best Score and Best Book, Spare's acting credits were mostly local and included two prior productions of "Annie," at Riverside Theatre Works in Hyde Park and at the Orpheum Theatre in Foxboro.

"I love 'Annie.' Even if I wasn't doing the show, I would still love it," says the nine-year-old who is being home-schooled while she travels the country.

Spare isn't the only fan of the show based on the classic Harold Gray comic strip "Little Orphan Annie," which first appeared in newspapers nationwide in 1924. The original Broadway production — with music by Charles Strouse and book by Thomas Meehan, and directed by its lyricist Martin Charnin — ran for 2,377 performances and has since been produced all over the world and turned into a 1982 feature film starring Albert Finney, Carol Burnett, and Bernadette Peters, with Aileen Quinn in the title role. The current touring production, again being directed by Charnin, features a fresh new look by Tony Award-winning set designer Ming Cho Lee.

It was the Tony Award-winning director for whom Spare auditioned last summer on a memorable trip to New York with her mother.

"A friend and fellow performer who regularly goes to New York for auditions invited us to join her last June," explained Maureen Spare by telephone from her daughter's tour stop last week in the nation's capital. "Martin Charnin is terrific. He treats all the young performers like they're his little girls. After the first full day, Abby made the cut and was invited back for day two with just 40 other girls. At the end of that day, when we were told that they weren't going to cut anybody else, we got on the train to come home to Massachusetts. We were about 20 minutes outside New York when my cell phone rang. They were calling to offer Abby the role of Tessie. She was in rehearsals for three weeks in August and she's been on the road since then. By the time we arrive in Boston, Abby will have done some 200 shows." And made almost as many new friends.

"Abby is the youngest person in the company and she is treated very well by the entire cast. There are about 25 adult cast members. And the girls who are 12 and 13 watch out for her and always make sure to include her in activities."

While her mother has joined the nine-year-old for the entire tour, Abby's father, Alex Spare, also makes frequent road trips to visit his wife and daughter.

"He usually comes out about every three weeks or so. It gives us a chance to be together as a family, which is great," says Maureen Spare.

The youngest Spare likes it when both her parents are with her on the road, but she does miss the family's two dogs that stay behind with friends in Foxboro. The four-legged cast member who plays Annie's faithful companion, Sandy, provides some welcome canine company.

"Sandy is great. He's good in the show and he's nice to play with. He also has an understudy who is a lot of fun, too."

"Annie" will be at the Citi Performing Arts Center's Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston, March 25-30. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 1-800-447-7400 or go online at citicenter.org

Treat's homework could be assigned

Potential study to go before Town Meeting

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Does the Treat's Pond salt marsh restoration project need more study?

The Board of Selectmen has opted to have Town Meeting consider this question on the warrant. A last minute change before the warrant headed to the printer this week added language to allocate a portion of funds for an engineering and environmental study on the Army Corps of Engineers' current project plans.

While last week and in previous meetings, the Selectmen have expressed support for creating a tidal exchange between the ocean and Treat's Pond by installing a pipe through Whale Meadow and into the outer harbor, the Selectmen said Monday it might not be the most prudent option.

Selectmen chairman Gary Vanderweil said during last week's meeting they were informed of the "immediate vigorous objections from many of the abutters of the Whale Meadow route" whose land would need to be purchased, donated or taken by eminent domain to complete the project.

"It appears there is large scale resistance by the abutters. We could avoid beating ourselves against a wall and maybe spending hundreds of thousand of dollars by opening up other routes, like Atlantic Avenue," said Vanderweil.

Town Meeting will be asked to allocate or borrow funds of up to $300,000 to partially match a $728,000 congressional appropriation. The article will need a two-thirds vote at Town Meeting.

Over the summer, the Army Corps engineers presented four possible solutions to restore Treat's Pond. The Army Corps recommended two of the proposed solutions. The two recommended options would install a large pipe from Treat's Pond to discharge at either the inner harbor (via Atlantic Avenue) or the outer harbor (via Whitehead Road and Whale Meadow). The other options were to take no action to restore the pond or install a box culvert at Sandy Cove.

Vanderweil proposed the study look at which of the Army Corps proposed routes would be optimal.

"My thought is to have the engineer validate what the preferred route is," he said, adding it is likely an equivalent amount of money would likely need to be done to solve the flooding issues plaguing the Atlantic Avenue area surrounding Treat's Pond.

Although the focus of the Army Corps of Engineers plans is to enable

Is Town Hall really haunted?

Mass Paranormal Society to investigate this spring

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"We'll only say something is haunted if we have proof."
—Tom Ventosi, Massachusetts Paranormal Society

Sometimes what's needed is a second opinion.

In January, the Town Hall was declared haunted by the Enfield Paranormal Society after a weekend long investigation into whether there was an otherworldly presence within the historic building. But some in and outside of town remained skeptical of the group's claims.

In the coming months another paranormal group will be spending time in the basement jail cells, the auditorium where Humphery Bogart once acted and the narrow staircases of the 1857 building. The Massachusetts Paranormal Society contacted town officials after seeing a television news story on the Enfield group's ghost hunt.

"Usually the investigations come to us, not the other way around," said Tom Ventosi, vice president of the Massachusetts Paranormal Society based in Quincy. But, when he saw the news clip with the group claiming the Town Hall was haunted based primarily on a door closing, Ventosi's first question was whether or not the evidence was thoroughly examined to ensure it was truly paranormal activity.

"Did they put a level on the floor? Where was the debunk?" said Ventosi, adding it's not unusual for doors in old building to close by themselves. With the evidence gathered by the Enfield Paranormal Society, Ventosi said he would never have declared the Town Hall haunted.

But that doesn't mean it's not, Ventosi said. Town Manager administrative assistant Jennifer Oram, who is coordinating with the group, met with the group to hear their methods and plans on Wednesday morning. Town Hall employees, including Health Inspector Tara Tradd, whose desk is feet away from the mysterious closing door, as well as the Mariner joined the meeting.

"I think it's important to bring in a skeptical view," Oram said and the group agreed.

The Massachusetts Paranormal Society has received permission to spend a few nights over the next couple of months to do a "paranormal investigation" at the Town Hall. The Massachusetts Paranormal Society formerly started in 2006, but some of it

Following up on accidental 9-1-1 calls

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It happens. Residents dial 9-1-1 when they mean to dial 4-1-1; some office workers have to dial the number 9 and then 1 for an outside line and hit 1 again by mistake; and some kids accidentally dial 9-1-1 when they are playing with the phone.

It does not matter how a 9-1-1 call is dialed – whether a real emergency or simply an accident – Cohasset police follow up on them all, Chief James Hussey said.

"We make sure we check on the caller's well being," Hussey said. "We always send a car just in case someone who tried to call for help was denied that opportunity."

Hussey said residents who mistakenly dial 9-1-1 should not be surprised or upset when an officer arrives and asks questions. The officer is just doing his or her job.

He said following up on all 9-1-1 calls, even when the individual is called back and explains the call was accidental, is police protocol. There is always the chance that someone who needed help hung up the phone.

Calling 9-1-1 as a prank when there is no emergency can be a criminal offense, Hussey said. "That person could be charged with interfering with emergency lines," he said.

Landscaping items

A local landscaper, who stores equipment in a garage off North Main Street, discovered some items were taken and believes the theft occurred sometime from March 4-6, police said.

When the landscaper, who lives in Hull, returned to the garage he found that assorted tools, landscape grade shovels and rakes, and extension cords with a total value of $800-$900 were missing.

The incident is under investigation.

OUI arrest

A 43-year-old Scituate woman is facing drunk driving charges after a traffic stop Thursday (March 6) on Chief Justice Cushing Highway. Police said the officer was traveling north on Route 3A in the area of Crocker Lane when the officer saw a car heading south at a high rate of speed. The officer also saw the car cross the solid yellow line and had to swerve the cruiser out of the way to avoid a collision.

The officer turned around and followed the car, observing it cross over the centerline. The 2005 gray Chrysler Sebring was pulled over and the officer called for backup. Observations at the scene and of the woman's driving resulted in her arrest on the charge of OUI (alcohol).

Ran out

Police have a partial plate on a dark-colored Jeep Cherokee with six teens, both boys and girls, who allegedly ran out of Feng Shui in Cohasset Plaza last Friday (March 7) at 10:55 p.m. without paying their $72 check. The incident is under investigation.

Marijuana arrest

A 24-year-old Marshfield man was arrested for possession of Class D (marijuana) and for being an unlicensed driver following a traffic stop last Saturday (March 8) at about 10 p.m. near Jerusalem Road and Forest Avenue. An officer saw the black 2003 Kia make an improper left turn and pulled it over. A computer check revealed the operator had a suspended license and an outstanding warrant. He was taken into custody and during the inventory check, police discovered marijuana in the vehicle.

Purse stolen

Another woman has lost her pocketbook after leaving it in her unlocked car. The woman parked at Shaw's last Thursday (March 6) and believed the theft occurred at 11 a.m. Gone are $40 in cash, some personal papers and the black leather handbag, police said. Police are reviewing the surveillance tapes from the Shaw's parking lot and have checked the woman's car for fingerprints. Again, police urge women to take their pocketbooks into the store with them no matter how quick their errand is. They should also lock their car.

Speeding

Police talked to a group of teens in a blue Mustang who were observed speeding at around 3-3:15 p.m. on Atlantic Avenue last Thursday. There were four 18-year-olds in the car and all were wearing seatbelts. The driver admitted to speeding and was given a verbal warning. A caller alerted police about the speeding.

MV accident

A 2005 Buick operated by a Hingham resident "rear-ended" a 2002 Mini Cooper operated by a Cohasset resident when the Cooper was trying to make a left into a driveway off Chief Justice Cushing Highway near lower King Street last Friday (March 7). Both cars were headed north (toward Hingham). Medics evaluated the motorists and no one was transported. The driver of the Buick was cited for failure to use care when stopping.

Unsafe activity

A caller reported seeing a group of youths in a dark-colored Volvo wagon driving up and down Sohier Street with the occupants riding on the roof and hood. Witnesses reported the driver was female and one of the passengers on the roof was a male with red hair. Police were not able to locate the car but are concerned when young people "horse around" in a car.

"Obviously, this could result in serious injury," Chief Hussey said. " It goes well beyond driving without a seatbelt."

Cook inquiry

Weymouth police sought Cohasset's help last week after a cook at a local restaurant was wanted for an alleged assault and battery in Weymouth. Cohasset police went to the restaurant and the individual was not working that night. Police passed the information on to Weymouth PD.

Stormwater bylaw heads for primetime

Selectmen unanimously support proposal

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"Going forward this bylaw ensures future development doesn't make the same mistakes."
— Marty Nee, Stormwater Committee

It's been two years in the making, but the stormwater management bylaw will finally get its day at Town Meeting. The Board of Selectmen recommended the approval of the article unanimously, but the five-page general bylaw still has to pass muster with Town Meeting voters.

The Stormwater Management Committee, a Selectmen appointed committee, has gone through dozens of drafts to get to this point. They have sought the input of town boards and individuals during the vetting process. The end result is a stormwater management bylaw proposal that establishes regulation and organization to the town-wide issue of flooding and stormwater runoff.

The stormwater bylaw is significant because it could implement controls on stormwater runoff so increased development will not exacerbate the flooding issues throughout town, much of which has been caused by years of development. The bylaw ensures post-development runoff (including peak flow, total volume of runoff and water quality of runoff) for development and re-development projects are equal or less than what exists now.

"Going forward this bylaw ensures future development doesn't make the same mistakes," said Stormwater Committee Chairman Marty Nee in a phone interview. At the same time, Nee said the bylaw doesn't limit development it simply ensures runoff is taken into consideration before a building is constructed.

At Monday night's meeting, Selectmen Ralph Dormitzer suggested minor changes to the bylaw as members of the Stormwater Management Committee made their final presentation to the Selectmen.

Crafting the bylaw with just enough regulation to protect property owners without making the process onerous was Dormitzer's major concern.

"I don't want to make it burdensome for people," to ensure it is palatable both to Town Meeting voters and to future applicants under the bylaw, said Dormitzer. "I really want people to submit the application."

There was a discussion about the fee structure for applications, although exact fees are not a part of the bylaw. A separate document of stormwater regulations will define the application procedure and fee structure. The Selectmen requested the Stormwater Management Committee to bring the regulations before them for review if the bylaw ultimately passes.

"I want to make sure the fees are not a tax by another name. In no way we should be charging more than the cost of the service," said Dormitzer.

Stormwater Committee member Sarah Charron said there would likely be an application fee as well as a review fee, based on the size and amount of professional review a given project needed. Charron said the fees would be structured so the town could cover the cost incurred, but nothing more.

The bylaw creates two levels of regulation. An administrative review will be required for any construction that will result in an increase of impervious surface area between 500 and 5,000 square feet of land. The lower end (500 square feet) would be about the size of a two-car garage.

In both cases a town-hired engineer, or "stormwater agent," the fee to be paid by the applicant, will review the plan.

This is the Stormwater Management Committee's second try at Town Meeting. Last year, a version of the Stormwater bylaw appeared in the Annual Town Meeting warrant but was indefinitely postponed to undergo more vetting. While that version of the bylaw established a full-blown Stormwater Commission, the current draft places the authority for stormwater permits in the hands of the Conservation Commission.

In the bylaw, the Conservation Commission is given the authority to contract the services of an engineer to assist them in the review of both levels of regulation - administrative review and stormwater permit applications.

The Planning Board voted to not recommend the Stormwater Management bylaw in a split 3-2 vote. Members Stuart Ivimey and Mike Westcott were the dissenting votes. The Stormwater bylaw was presented to the Advisory Committee on Tuesday, but have yet to take a position on it.

More homework needed on Treat's Pond

a saltmarsh restoration of Treat's Pond, the Board of Selectmen are also looking at the project as a way to mitigate the flooding issues along Atlantic Avenue.

Vice Chairman Ted Carr said there are time constraints on the congressional appropriation of $728,000; the funds must to be used in the 2009 calendar year. If the money is not used, Carr said Cohasset's Treat's Pond project would be taken off the list and the money transferred to a similar project in Quincy.

Several questions cropped up from the audience. Tom Callahan of 35 Hillside Dr. asked if there was a real need to validate the Army Corps plans. Vanderweil said it was necessary, "if we're going to discharge a 42-inch pipe through the inner harbor, we need a study."

"My thought is to have the engineer validate what the preferred route is."
— Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil

Karen Quigley of 27 Clay Spring Road asked if the proposed study would be over and above the ongoing Flood Control Master Plan. Vanderweil said this would be a separate study to independently determine the best solution from an engineering and environmental standpoint.

The cost for the independent study will come out of the $300,000 town contribution to match the federal funds. Vanderweil said the independent study could cost up to a third of that amount, roughly $100,000.

The town has also requested its legislative representatives to seek up to $500,000 from state sources. As a requirement of the federal funding, 35 percent of the cost must come from non-federal funding sources. The current estimate to complete the project is $1.7 million. The project is estimated state Rep. Garrett Bradley said it is too early in the process to say whether state funding will be available or in what amount for the project.

When the motion to amend the article came to a vote, Selectman Fred Koed hesitated to give his support.

"Ideally I'd like to see the timing of this roll into the master plan," said Koed. "I have serious reservations about putting anything else in the harbor."

Koed ultimately voted with the other Selectmen because he felt the issue should go before Town Meeting to ensure the town has the opportunity to take advantage of the federal appropriation.

With the Selectmen's 4-0 vote (Selectmen Ralph Dormitzer recused himself from the discussion and vote), the Town Meeting article (article 22) expands the scope of the project to include an independent engineering and environmental impact assessment. The article still requests a $300,000 town contribution to devote to this project. All references to lot and parcel numbers of affected properties were removed from the article's wording.

Harnessing wind: a new frontier

Bylaw set for town meeting

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Wind turbines would be an entirely new frontier for the town of Cohasset. On the table at upcoming Town Meeting is a set of regulations to govern large commercial-size wind turbines.

The Board of Selectman unanimously supported the wind bylaw article (article 14) on Monday night. Town Meeting voters will have the final say on March 29.

The article is a town-wide zoning bylaw establishing regulations for commercial size wind turbines. The projects would have to go through a special permit process, overseen by the Planning Board. The proposed wind turbine would have to conform to the setback, noise and siting requirements outlined in the bylaw.

The Alternative Energy Committee, a Selectmen appointed committee, has been working on the bylaw for over a year.

The bylaw limits the height of a wind turbine to 350 feet, measured from the pre-construction grade to the highest point of the blades. In order for the proposed zoning bylaw to kick in, the size of the turbine must be greater than 500 kilowatts.

As a point of reference, Alternative Energy Committee Chairman Andrew Willard said Hull Wind I located next to Hull High is 242 feet high and a 660-kilowatt size.

Smaller residential size wind turbines are not regulated through this bylaw, but in order to erect one a property owner would have to get approval from the zoning board of appeals.

A separate zoning amendment (article 15) makes wind energy conversion facilities, or wind turbines, an allowed use in all districts subject to a special permit.

In addition to the bylaw, the Alternative Energy Committee is also actively investigating the feasibility of a wind turbine in Cohasset. A meteorological experimental test, or MET tower, is collecting wind data on Turkey Hill for a year.

In the AEC's research, only four parcels in town will have land suitable for a turbine about the size of Hull's Wind I under the proposed bylaw: behind the Middle-High School, at the transfer station, behind Hingham Lumber (Graham Waste) and Turkey Hill.

If the town were to pursue a wind turbine under current state law, the only viable location for a town-owned wind turbine would be behind the high school. Under current state law, Cohasset is at a disadvantage because it does not have a municipal light company. Towns with municipal light companies are able to sell excess energy generated back to National Grid for a profit. For towns without municipal light companies, like Cohasset, electricity generated but not used on site is bought by the National Grid for one rate then sold back to the Town for a higher rate.

There is a bill proposed at the State House to make the meter read both ways, so when more energy is put into the grid than taken out; a credit is given to the Town. Conversely, if more energy is taken out than is put into the grid, the Town is billed.

Because the Middle-High School is the town's largest energy consumer, all the energy generated by the wind turbine would be able to go directly into the school.

If and when the town was ready to pursue the installation of it own wind turbine, there would be an extensive vetting process, Willard said. The town would likely need to borrow the funds for the wind turbine bringing the proposal back before the Board of Selectmen, the Capital Budget Committee, the Planning Board and ultimately Town Meeting.

Mass Paranormal Society to investigate this spring members were doing investigations before that.

They approach each investigation with set procedures and an open mind. Through the collection of video, photos, audio, interviews and temperature changes they will attempt to prove or disprove the suspected haunting.

"We don't fabricate and we don't lie. We'll only say something is haunted if we have proof," said Ventosi.

According to their printed investigation procedures, a log will be kept by each investigator of nearly everything — emotions, strange noises, observations, temperatures — with times during the course of the investigation. Notes are compared after the investigation.

"We believe everyone deserves a thorough investigation," said Ventosi.

The Massachusetts Paranormal Society will come with a handful of investigators, including Ventosi, his wife Julie and his son. Co-founder John Gaudette and the founder of another paranormal group, Massachusetts Paranormal Team, Gary Manley will also join the investigation. Before setting up their equipment, they plan on doing research on the history of the Town Hall to get a feel of the many purposes it has served over the years. While in Cohasset they stopped in to the Historical Society building to gather information.

The paranormal investigations are being done at no cost to the taxpayers, neither paranormal group charges for its services. Although groups are out there that do charge a significant amount of money for investigations or consulting.

"I don't understand how people are charging for a science that's not proven," said Ventosi.

The meeting was followed by a top-to-bottom tour of the Town Hall. After seeing the size of the place, Ventosi has already spotted out 15 locations to place cameras.

"I think we might have to borrow from another group," said Ventosi.

The Massachusetts Paranormal Society will schedule their investigations with Oram during the spring.

Cohasset Housing Trust gets Selectmen support

The Housing Partnership Committee has been before the Board of Selectmen on several occasions to discuss their proposal to establish a "housing trust."

An Affordable Housing Trust has been created in towns across the state, including Hingham and Duxbury. A state statute sets out the general terms of a Housing Trust. At its simplest terms, the Housing Trust is the functional equivalent of a separate enterprise fund, like the water and sewer departments, set up for the purposed of developing affordable housing, said Housing Partnership co-chairman Tom Callahan.

A nine-member committee separate from the Housing Partnership would oversee the funds in the Housing Trust account.

The funds in the trust, generated from developers, possible Community Preservation funds and gifts, would be used to enable affordable housing projects either by the town or by providing subsidies to developers.

In the past and again at their meeting Monday night, some of the Selectmen expressed concern there would not be enough checks and balances for the Housing Trust.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer expressed concern the Housing Trust could go ahead and financially support a project in which the Board of Selectmen objected to. However, Callahan said the projects the Housing Trust would be some form of friendly 40-B projects, which must have the support of the municipality.

After discussion, the Board of Selectmen recommended 5-0 the approval of the Housing Trust (article 19). The Advisory Committee supported the article as well in a 6-2 vote.

The funds in the trust, generated from developers, possible Community Preservation funds and gifts, would be used to enable affordable housing projects either by the town or by providing subsidies to developers.

Study for harbor needed

CPC recommends $20,000 match to private gift

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

At Special Town Meeting in November, the Village zoning bylaws got a complete overhaul. With that momentum, the Planning Board is looking to turn its attention to the harbor and the waterfront business district.

Planning Board member Mike Westcott came before the Community Preservation Committee to seek matching funds for a private gift from waterfront property owner Peter Roy of 49 Margin St. After much discussion, the CPC agreed to fund the harbor study through a 50/50 match of $20,000 each.

"We had hoped to fund the study through the town, but that's proving very difficult," said Westcott. An article is on the warrant requests an allocation to fund the harbor study project, which is estimated to cost $40,000, but it is likely the Planning Board will suggest the article be indefinitely postponed.

The harbor study will take a similar approach to what was done last year in the village. The village consulting firm, Concord Square Development of Boston, led by principal Angus Jennings was hired under an expandable contract and is interested in working with Cohasset again, Westcott said.

"The harbor is a different district with a whole different set of needs," said Westcott, and what zoning bylaws worked in the village may not work in the harbor. But, Planning Board chairman and CPC member Al Moore said, "we have a technique in place that worked pretty well."

The professional town planning consultant would look at what's currently there in the harbor district, which includes the businesses on the harbor side of Border Street — Cohasset Harbor Inn, Atlantica, Olde Salt House and the Mill River Marine — ending at the Border Street bridge, and determine what, if any, changes to the zoning bylaws are needed to optimize the space. The small storefronts near the intersection of Elm Street and Border Street are considered to be a part of a downtown zoning district, not the waterfront, but would be considered in the scope of the potential study. Roy is the primary landowner in the waterfront business district.

Like the village study, the process would include a thorough public vetting process where all sectors of the community could participate, said Westcott.

Much of the discussion centered on whether it was appropriate for the town to join financial forces with a private landowner.

"I have a hard time with the person funding the study being by far the biggest stakeholder," said CPC member Debbie Cook. She, along with several of the other committee members, was concerned with the perceptions community members may have with this type of funding cooperation and if the study could stay objective.

Planning Board members said the entire harbor study process would be public and would be under the sole direction of the Planning Board.

For Special Town Meeting, Roy's attorney Charles Humphreys proposed several zoning bylaw changes in the form of a citizen's petition. The changes were very similar to the ones proposed for the village business district. In short, the citizen's petition would allow mixed-use in the waterfront district and enable apartment/condominium development.

At a meeting with the Board of Selectmen in November, Humphreys said his client would like to convert the second and third floors of the Cohasset Harbor Inn to 16-18 condominium units. Right now, the bylaw prohibits residential use. But, Moore said Roy's plans would be inconsequential in the study.

"It might come out of the study that the best use is to take the (Cohasset Harbor Inn) down and make it open space…the options are that open. The study is not to figure out how to make the Inn viable, that's not what we're doing," said Moore, adding the Planning Board made it clear to Humphreys the gift was to come with no strings attached.

The harbor study would give the town the knowledge and data it needed to make, or not make, zoning bylaw changes that could affect the town for years to come, "we don't know what we don't know right now," said CPC chairman and Planning Board member Stuart Ivimey.

Although it seemed all CPC members agreed the harbor study was a worthwhile project, the issue became how much the CPC should contribute to the project. A member floated paying for the entire cost of the harbor study, others suggested a two to one match with the private gift, while others felt comfortable with a 50/50 match.

After reviewing the finances left in the CPC accounts, the committee recommended $20,000 be put toward the harbor study to evenly match Roy's gift to the town.

The CPC only makes recommendations to Town Meeting and voters will have the final say over how community preservation funds are spent on the Town Meeting floor.

The CPA at a glance

- Funds from the CPA can be spent in three specific areas: open space, affordable housing, and historic preservation.
- Aside from minor administrative costs, the CPC does not spend money. The CPC only makes recommendations to the legislative authority in a town or municipality (in Cohasset's case, Town Meeting).
- Each year, the CPC must spend or bank 10 percent of its annual revenue on each of the three specific areas.
- CPA funds are generated from two sources, a town real estate tax surcharge (in Cohasset 1.5 percent) and some level of state match, determined from year-to-year. So far Cohasset and other participating towns have received a 100 percent state match each year. The state funds are derived from a $20 surcharge on all documents filed in the Recorder of Deeds Office statewide (e.g. mortgages, deeds, homesteads, etc.).
- The average single family home valued at $848,000 will pay $118.93 in CPA tax this year.

"I have a hard time with the person funding the study being by far the biggest stakeholder."
— Debbie Cook, CPC member

New babies and smart students to brag about!

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

GO BLUE!

Hello Cohasset! How is everyone doing as we start to get closer to Spring? It will be so nice to have it warmer to match the later daylight at the end of the day that is for sure.

Three cheers and so many more to our Cohasset girls basketball team as they rose to victory in a nail biter on Tuesday afternoon. What a wonderful game and it was so great for the students and fans to be able to attend this game if they chose from school. Hats off to all who planned and organized this and again, to the girls who played so well, GREAT JOB! Cohasset is so proud of you all.

To all of those who enjoy "being green", Happy St. Patrick's Day to you on Monday.

A ton of get-well-soon wishes have been pouring in for Mrs. Judy Ritts from children and adults alike. Everyone loves to see you out and about getting better and keeping up that great spirit of yours. Keep it up Judy and get well soon.

We have two new babies to welcome in our world and a number of interesting events and students to talk about so here we go.

OH BOY!

Congratulations are in order for Scott and Mary Henry of Cohasset and big brothers Nicholas, who is 4, and Ben, who is 2. Their happy family welcomed a bouncing new baby boy, Oliver Clark Henry on Feb. 27, 2008. Oliver is a big boy and weighed in at 9 pounds, 11ounces and is loving life at home. He is the grandson of Kate and Roger Clark of New Canaan, Conn. and May and Bob Henry of Sunapee, N.H.

BIGLEY BEAUTY

We also have a sweet baby girl to welcome to our world. Adele Charlotte Bigley was born to Morgan and Claire Bigley at 3:23 a.m., Saturday March 8, 2008. She weighs 8 pounds, 5 ounces and is 21 inches long. Adele is the first grandchild of the Bigleys (David and Alix) and David has extended an invitation to anyone who would like to see some photos to stop by his Natural Foods Store, "All The Best" at One Pleasant St. in downtown Cohasset.

Morgan, Adele's dad grew up here in town and they are now all settled in at home in Somerville. Congratulations to you all

40TH REUNION

Cohasset High School Class of 1968 is organizing its 40th class reunion. The festivities will take place on Saturday, Aug. 16 from 6 -10 p.m. at the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island. The cost is $40 per person for a fabulous night of food, beer and wine and dancing and all of us together again. The class has had some really great reunions in the past and would like "to celebrate the rest of our lives with what's left of us". They are also looking for the following people from the class of 1968: Anne Bessac, Patty Dowding, Bob Flanagan, Mary Hall, Alison Hatheway, Jim Hurley, Richard James, Sue McIntyre, John McNeil, Jeanne Polito, Ellen Souther, Kathy Hobbs, and Karen Walsh. If you have any information about these people or others from the class of 1968, we ask you to call or email, Catherine (Cathy) Davis at 781-383-2570 or catherineedavis@gmail.com. If you want to be part of the organizational meeting or want to purchase a ticket, please contact Cathy as indicated above. Look forward to hearing from everyone.

20TH REUNION

Another year is calling all Cohasset High School alumni from the class of 1988. It is time to start thinking about your 20-year high school reunion which is in the works for sometime this summer. If you are interested in helping organize or just want to update your contact information please email Heather St. Onge Nicholls at hmnicholls@comast.net.

COLLEGE TENNIS

The Middlebury College women's tennis team started the season off with four wins as they hosted matches last weekend indoors on campus. The Panthers lost just one game on the weekend as they earned four convincing victories. Middlebury defeated Babson, Bates and Skidmore 9-0, while defeating Brandeis 8-1.

Junior Elizabeth Stone of Cohasset earned perfect 4-0 marks for Middlebury over the two-day event. In doubles play, Elizabeth and her partner Jamie Haar, a sophomore, went 2-0.

ROAD RACE

Celebrate the coming of spring by running in the 32nd annual Cohasset Road Race by the Sea. Enjoy one of the most beautiful 10K routes in New England as it winds along the Atlantic Ocean and through this quintessential New England seaside town. Race begins at 1 p.m. on Sunday, April 6th. For those who prefer to take their time, there's also the 4th Annual Fran Coffey Memorial Walk on the same day. Walk begins at 10 a.m. Awards for winners of the road race, plus other prizes and refreshments. E-mail questions to 2008@roadracebythesea.com or visit www.roadracebythesea.com for information on the run or the walk. All are welcome!

DEAN'S LIST

Molly Kate Gallagher has been named to second honors on the Clark University dean's list. This selection marks outstanding academic achievement during the Fall 2007 semester. Molly Kate is a member of Clark University's Class of 2011.

The following Cohasset students were named to the University of Massachusetts Amherst dean's list: Mary C. Fegreus, Sera A. Genovese, Stephen P. Murray, Julia G. Scribner, Brian J Straughn.

Congratulations, all!

PSO TELETHON

Relax in the comfort of your own home or join us at the High School auditorium where we will be broadcasting live for the fifth annual Cohasset PSO Telethon & On-line Auction on Thursday, April 10 from 7-9 pm on Comcast Channel 22. Support your public schools by phoning in your tax-deductible pledges to 1-800-719-3199. Remember, the more you pledge, the more chances you have to win our exciting raffle items. For a $100 pledge, you will be entered into the raffle for the Grand Prize: Boston Harbor Hotel Romance Pkg. (retail value over $800), 1st Prize: Kayaks, and lots more prizes available for $100, $75, $50 or $25. The talent show has always been a lot of fun to watch. Who knows— maybe you will spot the next "American Idol!"

'JOSEPH'

The last weekend to come and enjoy a colorful and musical story of Joseph and his coat of many colors as told through the musical score and lyrics of Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber presented by the Cohasset Dramatic Club is here. The show is tonight and Saturday night, March 15th at 7:30 and Sunday, March 16th at 2:00 pm. and is held at the Cohasset Town Hall Auditorium. Tickets are $14, $12 groups of 8 or more and may be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, Paperscapes, 1 Highland Ave. or by calling 617-697-2115. Ticket also available at the door. This is such a great way to enjoy an evening with friends and/or family members with music, color and fun. See you there!

Giving a world away: Fourth graders help in El Salvador

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

A pencil case filled with pencils, erasers, pencil sharpener, colored pencils and stickers don't seem like a lot to most kids in Cohasset. But, a fourth grade class at Deer Hill School recently learned just how much those little items could mean to someone very far away.

In November, Jane Thomas's class embarked on a project to help an extremely poor neighborhood in El Salvador — and maybe learn a great deal about helping other in the process. Diane Fischer of Weymouth made contact with Mrs. Thomas's class as she prepared to make her second trip to the Central American country in January.

Simple items, often taken for granted in Cohasset, were the focus of the El Salvador project. She asked for the student's assistance in her effort to bring small, inexpensive school supplies to donate to kids halfway around the world. The class also collected money so Fischer and her travel mates could purchase mattresses.

Fischer's interest in El Salvador began over two decades ago when she adopted her daughter, Jenny from an orphanage outside of San Salvador. In January, Fischer, her daughter Jenny and two others headed to El Salvador with money, 200 pounds of clothes, shoes, pencils and mirrors to give away.

Fischer returned to Mrs. Thomas's class to show the students how much good their donations did for a group of people they likely will never meet. Jenny accompanied Fischer to the classroom last week, armed with photos and stories from their weeklong trip to El Salvador.

"I wanted the kids to know that their donations and effort made a difference in the lives of people they will never meet," said Fischer. A slideshow presentation gave the students a glimpse into life in an extremely poor section of El Salvador.

"Things in El Salvador are colorful, that's the way they like it to be," Fischer explained, but often the children don't have the markers, crayons and colored pencils to put colors on paper.

She showed pictures of stark classrooms with nothing posted on the walls and 40 desks squeezed into room about half the size of the fourth grade classroom. Double sessions allow the school to teach twice the amount of children in half the space of Deer Hill.

Although the school was high-tech in some ways by having a small computer lab, they were lacking significantly in others — there are no bathrooms in the entire building. She told the class how part of the school didn't have a roof; Fischer gave the school's principal money to pay for a new roof.

But, their focus was to bring needed supplies to a small barrio, or neighborhood, outside of the El Salvador capital San Salvador. Barrio Hortensia is a grouping on tiny one and two bedroom huts.

Fischer said it was difficult to hand stuff out because everyone wanted something, anything.

"They just really wanted stuff badly, they didn't care what it was. Women wanted stuff for the men, kids wanted stuff for the women, men wanted stuff for the kids, it didn't matter," said Fischer. Their gifts were warmly received, she said.

Eighteen mattresses were purchased to replace the bedding families currently slept on — springs with a sheet over them.

Salvadorian children need very little to be able to attend school — shoes, pencils and paper. With the help of the Mrs. Thomas's fourth grade class, Fischer was able to bring supplies of each to the barrio.

"The mothers wanted the pencil cases and the kids wanted the pencil cases," said Fischer. "They loved them."

As an extra bit of fun, they brought along with them Polaroid camera to give the kids and adults their very first picture of themselves.

Fischer and her group did not forget the necessities and left the barrio families enough money to purchase three months worth of groceries. Fischer said she left knowing how much their work meant to the neighborhood and for at least a little while wouldn't have to worry how they would pay for their next meal.

Although Fischer stressed the importance of "paying it forward" and for the students not to expect anything in return for helping another in need, she gave each of the students a small Salvadorian handmade clay animal.

"This is to remind you of the work you did for people in El Salvador and to inspire you to continue helping others without asking for anything in return," said Fischer.

Fischer and her daughter Jenny are committed to returning to El Salvador each year to do what they can to help the people there.

Last year's Healing Field at Cohasset Harbor was spectacular. The Sons of the American Legion is planning to install a Healing Field again this year as part of the town's Memorial Day 2008 observances.

'Healing Field' is planned for Memorial Day

The flags sell for $25 and can be dedicated to anyone.

The Sons of the American Legion is planning to install a Healing Field as part of the town's Memorial Day 2008 observances.

The effort should result in hundreds of American flags on eight-foot-tall poles temporarily installed on the town-owned island at the corner of Border and Summer streets. The island faces Veterans Memorial Park where the annual Memorial Day observances are held.

The flags sell for $25 and can be dedicated to anyone. In other words, the purchase of a flag is not limited to those honoring someone who is serving or has served in the Armed Forces. (Those who purchase flags will be able to pick them up after 10 days).

Checks should be made out to the Sons of the American Legion, with a note on the memo line indicating "Healing Field" and sent to Sons of the American Legion, PO Box 118, Cohasset, MA 02025. For more information, please visit www.healingfield.org/cohasset or contact the Legion post at 781-383-9657 or stop by the post at 98 Summer St. any weekday after 3 p.m., Saturdays after 10 a.m. or Sundays after 12 noon. Applications for Healing Field flags are available at the Post and at both branches of Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. All proceeds will go to veterans' projects of the Sons of the American Legion.

OPINION

Open forum

Our readers should know that the editorial pages of the Cohasset Mariner are among the most successful in the company. The numbers of letters and commentaries we receive annually numbers in the hundreds. Most weeks readers can count on an array of "op-ed" pieces and or letters on a range of topics. Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we are very proud of that.

We like to think in large part our readers' involvement in their hometown paper is a reflection of our comprehensive coverage of the town. We also realize that it is due to the particular character of Cohasset. We know that some of our readers have been lucky enough to have grown up in town and have chosen to stay. Others have "picked" Cohasset as their adopted hometown and almost immediately fell in love with the seaside community.

"Natives" and "newcomers" alike agree that Cohasset is special. Not only does it have spectacular ocean vistas coupled with true, quintessential New England charm – but it is the kind of community that outsiders can only fantasize about. It is still relatively small and is a place where it is still possible to know your neighbors and recognize friends and fellow residents whether strolling through the village or on a walk along Sandy Beach.

It is the love of the town and a deep, undying desire among so many to protect its unique and special qualities that propels so many residents to put their opinions in writing and share them with others through their Cohasset Mariner.

We carefully read all the letters and opinion pieces before publication — however, we have no way of knowing whether a particular writer has an agenda. (Most people do!) We do not accept anonymous submissions and require that all include a name and address.

We think that over the years, allowing the space and a free-wheeling discussion has not only been "self-policing" but enlightening and has helped move the community forward.

We know that for many of our readers, the editorial pages are the first ones they open to every Friday.

As journalists we love covering government and the issues – but that does not make us "experts." Sometimes we get requests to do an investigative, research piece on a particular environmental issue, for example. While we would love to do that – in most cases, we just do not have the staff, the time or are able to devote the resources to tackle it.

However, we welcome submissions from local experts that help shed light and educate us. We only ask that in the interests of space, such submissions are as concise as possible.

As always, we welcome feedback from our readers. We hope and believe the editorial pages of your Mariner will continue to be a true "community forum."

If there were more candidates for trustee positions, at least we might enjoy a whisper campaign

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

What's the hurry?

TO THE EDITOR:

What's the hurry on the fix for Treats Pond?

I see the sewer work has begun — at least the trench has been dug.

Can't we wait (and perhaps save thousands of dollars) to see if local sewerage will work? A cheaper temporary solution may be available (see Cohasset Mariner commentary of Feb. 28).

This ACE solution may become redundant by the time it's done. Plus we may have spent thousands of dollars in legal fees attempting to take the necessary eminent domain, etc.

As to turning down Federal money, Cohasset has a history of that — remember $1 million for a new sewer plant.

The town has no money to waste — let's be careful and DO IT RIGHT.

Greater flooding needs to be addressed

COMMENTARY

COGGINS AND OTHERS

We recognize the flooding issues on Atlantic Avenue at Treats Pond; however we do not believe that problem should have priority and accompanying funding over the greater stormwater flooding problem the town is facing in Jacob's Meadow, at the Wastewater Treatment Plant, and in Cohasset Harbor.

The recent return of the MBTA, the Village infrastructure upgrades that alleviated flooding at the Post office, and the disregard of engineering studies that emphatically stated what steps had to be taken to prevent the ever present flooding in the meadow, have all contributed to a flooding situation that repeats each tide cycle. Add to this disaster, a continuing overflow problem at the WWTP and you have, at the very least, a strong candidate for top flooding problem on the priority list.

Jacob's Meadow receives all the stormwater runoff from the 830-acre James Brook watershed. In a recent Stormwater Committee presentation to the Conservation Commission, Dan Coughlin, the engineer working on the town-wide stormwater management plan, stated that the James Brook and Jacob's Meadow experience the most severe flooding problem in town and should receive priority status.

The issue that concerns us the most is the price tag the proposed Treat's Pond project carries. We have repeatedly been told that the Town recognizes the dire situation in Jacob's Meadow; however, the money is not available to fix the many problems that cause the flooding in the Meadow. We have been asked to wait for the Stormwater Master Plan that will address the entire town flooding problem.

Why is there such a push by town officials to single out Treats Pond for special treatment? Why is this project of such importance that it is exempted from the overall "flooding" plan that has yet to be delivered? If this project receives town funding, what delaying effect will it have on town-wide stormwater remediation? How then can the Board of Selectmen, in good conscience, sponsor, promote and recommend a warrant that provides $300,000 of town money to alleviate flooding problems that have much less dire consequences than the problem that is sending partially-treated effluent into Cohasset Harbor?

If these funds were applied to stormwater mitigation as defined in previous engineering studies, they would go a long way to solving the flooding in the James Brook corridor and Jacob's Meadow, the overflows at the WWTP, the threat posed to the health of Cohasset Harbor once the extreme overflow pipe goes online, and would eliminate the negative impact on the homes that surround the Meadow.

Make no mistake about it; this is entirely about where the town should spend the limited capital it possesses. To commit funds to any project that does not solve the problem that hits Jacobs Meadow and Cohasset Harbor is an injustice to the town. Once that overflow pipe goes online, the effluent that filled our backyards at least five times in the last two years will flow unfettered into Cohasset Harbor. There it will affect the businesses, the fishing fleet, the Yacht Club and the Sailing Club. This is not a neighborhood problem, nor is it one that would be nice to do if we had the money. This is the single most important stormwater issue the town is facing today. $300,000 would go along way towards a cleaner harbor.

Explaining aeration of Lily Pond

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Cohasset Water Department developments – What - no skating on Lily Pond? We've done it for years! Why can't we skate there? Well, as you might suspect there is quite a story behind the "no skating" sign. Let's start at the beginning.

In the "good old days" drinking water was commonly treated with chlorine to disinfect it and make it safe for drinking. The natural consequence, since the introduction of municipal water treatment facilities, has been a dramatic reduction in water borne disease, much to society's benefit. But, as we get more sophisticated in our understanding of the chemistry of water purification, we found that chlorinating water also has some possible side effects. Like most water sources in the world, Cohasset's water supply has a small amount of organic matter that is leached from the surrounding earth. When this organic matter, even though the quantity is itty bitty, meets chlorine it combines to form traces of a family of chemicals called "trihalomethanes." These are also referred to by the initials "THM." "TTHM" refers to "Total Trihalomethanes," which represents the sum of all the trihalomethanes family of compounds measured in the water. The effects of trihalomethanes have been closely studied recently. Based on these data, the EPA has now set safe standards for maximum levels of TTHMs. So, for our water department to meet these standards the chlorination process needed to be rearranged.

To reduce TTHMs we have made changes to the chlorination process. But, rearranging the chlorination process, it turns out, increases some of the effects of a trace element called manganese in our drinking water. The manganese has been there all along and is common in water supplies. When water leaves the plant, manganese can be totally dissolved in the water and the water will be very clear. After the water has been pumped through the system, stored in one of our two storage tanks and its temperature changed multiple times, the manganese tends to drop out of solution and can appear as discolored water. This has been exacerbated by the revision of our chlorination processes to reduce TTHMs. Obviously having discolored water is not something we like. But, keep in mind manganese is essential for essential functioning of the human body. In fact, the manganese coloration that we dislike in our drinking water is the same source of color that was used by cave men to make their markings on cave walls.

Now, where does the manganese come from? It is a naturally occurring element and comes from the ground under Lily Pond and Aaron River Reservoir. Interestingly, we also found that the migration of manganese into the pond water from to soil tends to increase a bit in the warmer months. Our engineers and consultants have put their heads together to find an economical way to reduce the absorption of manganese into the water. Interestingly enough, industry research has shown that if the pond has a high amount of dissolved oxygen, this will retard the absorption of manganese into the water. Thus, less manganese in the water will reduce the downstream effects and resulting discoloration.

Lily Pond Aeration System location.

This winter, the Cohasset Water Department installed an aeration system in Lily Pond to minimize the manganese absorption. Its goal is to add an appreciable amount of oxygen to the water in Lily Pond. This system consists of several components. First, there is an air compressor and an air storage tank used to balance the air pressure that will be fed to Lily Pond. Next, there is a distribution system that feeds the air from the pressure tank to five separate places throughout Lily Pond. The distribution system also contains valves to allow the Water Department to individually adjust the amount of air to each of the five pond aeration locations. Lastly, at each of the Lily Pond aeration points there is a large submerged donut about six feet in diameter. The air is pumped into the donut and escapes into the pond through a large number of holes drilled in the donut's perimeter.

Although manganese is a contributor to discolored water, keep in mind there are other sources of discoloration. For example, any time a valve in the supply system is turned on or off it's possible that some of the naturally occurring micro particles on the inside of water lines can be knocked loose and find their way into your home. Water line construction also can cause a temporary similar discoloration effect. But, addressing the manganese level at the source should pay dividends to all water users.

The photos show workers on a raft with one of the donut shaped air diffuser rings that will aerate Lily Pond. Another photo shows a close up of the air bubbles coming from the donut in a test pond. Lastly, there is an overhead view of Lilly Pond which shows the donut and compressor locations. To help orient you, King Street is in the upper right hand corner of the photo.

So, we've come full circle. The reason that large amount of air is being pumped into Lilly Pond is to reduce the manganese absorption into the water. This should result in clearer water for all of us. Because the air is pumped into the pond, the ice that develops on the surface is not as solid as it otherwise would be without aeration. The net result, no ice sports on Lily Pond.

Greenbush Update – There is not much to report this week. Continued surveys confirm that Cohasset ridership seems to have plateaued. Spot checks show between 160 and 165 cars in the Cohasset Station parking lot on a daily basis.

The ubiquitous Chinese take-out

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

More years ago than I care to count, I had occasion to visit the Northwest Territories of Canada to watch Her Majesty's government pack up a town called Aklavik, which was sinking into the mud, move it to higher ground and rename it Inuvik.

I was never able to reach Aklavik, or Inuvik, for that matter, but that's another story.

In my search for something to write about to justify my expense account, I connected with a bush pilot named Pat Carey and followed him for a couple of days as he flew in and out of the small towns in the muskeg around Great Slave Lake.

I noticed a strange thing. All the towns, great and small, had a Chinese restaurant.

As it was explained to me, the towns all started out as mining or logging camps and each of them imported a Chinese cook because they came cheap in those days. When the mines and the logs petered out, the campers left, leaving the cooks behind with empty woks.

All that was left to them was to learn to make chop suey and open a restaurant.

I was reminded of my days with Chinese take-out in the bush the other day when I learned that there are no less than 43,000 Chinese restaurants in the United States.

That's more than all the MacDonalds, Burger Kings and KFCs combined. But not Dunkin' Donuts franchises, judging by the number that I've counted in Weymouth alone.

Those figures come from a new book, "The Fortune Cookie Chronicles: Adventures in the World of Chinese Food," by Jennifer 8. Lee, who, incidentally, discovered in her researches that fortune cookies actually are a Japanese, not a Chinese, invention.

That middle initial, "8." in her name is correct. I don't know why but it must have some mystic Chinese significance because real Chinese cookbooks carry recipes for an entrée known as "8 jewel duck" and a dessert called "8 precious pudding."

I say "real Chinese cookbooks" because the best known Chinese food, chop suey, actually was invented in America, reputedly by a Chinese cook who threw together the leftover bean sprouts, bamboo shoots, water chestnuts, et al, doused them with soy sauce to kill the taste and served it as a delicacy.

There are five different types of Chinese cuisine — Cantonese, which is favored in most U. S. restaurants; Szechuan, highly spiced; Beijing-Shantung, sometimes called mandarin, the cuisine of the aristocracy; Honan and Fukien.

Lee's book also uncovers sort of an underground railroad for illegal immigrants from China.

If you've managed to sneak into the country without checking in and you can't speak English, go to New York's Chinatown, where listings are posted for job opportunities in restaurants across the country.

And the opportunities must be good because there are 43,000 of them — and that's not counting those in the Northwest Territories.

The Office – Home Edition

THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

Ah... The joys of working from home. No commute, no dress code, and no dealing with colleagues worthy of a role on The Office. To those who venture into a "real" office on a regular basis, it does sound ideal. Yet, over the years, I've waivered in my devotion to my home office.

If you also work from home or are contemplating doing so, you'll probably find that while there are a lot of advantages, at times it can be quite lonely. It goes in stages. However, just in case the isolation really starts to get to you, here are the top 10 signs that it might be time to turn your home office back into a guest room and lease yourself some office space.

10. You take personal offence when the local Starbucks rearranges their interior layout without consulting you. How dare they? Shouldn't you have a say in what they do with your favorite conference room?

9. The only "water cooler conversation" in your life involves doing Tim Gunn imitations ("Designers ... I'm worried.") while discussing the Project Runway results on the phone with your mother.

8. You look wistfully at your closet full of unworn designer suits and high heels and think about how much fun it would be to play "dress up."

7. On a recent foray out to the Financial District for a meeting (wearing a suit that's older than your children and tripping on heels that your Croc-spoiled feet can no longer handle), you're astounded by the number of single men who exist in the world and are actually old enough to tie their own shoes.

6. You've given up rationalizing how you can possibly be home all day long and still not have a clean house.

5. In a lame attempt to actually clean, you challenge your other "work at home colleagues" to bring over their robotic vacuum cleaners so you all can have "Roomba races."

4. You realize that Sven in Iceland and other Facebook friends know more details about the monotony of your daily life than your actual friends.

3. You've once again eaten your kids' entire stash of blueberry pop-tarts, Scooby Doo fruit snacks, Spiderman cheese sticks and bubblegum flavored yogurt cups.

2. You are inexplicably drawn to Perez Hilton's blog throughout the day just so you don't miss the latest scoop on Britney, Amy Winehouse and those bobble-headed dolls otherwise known as the Olsen Twins.

...the top 10 signs that it might be time to turn your home office back into a guest room and lease yourself some office space.

However, in my experience, the number one sign that it might be time for you to get out of the house and go back to an office is:

1. You find yourself asking your children at dinner if they remember whether or not Mommy showered today.

Diane K. Danielson is a Cohasset resident who is actually in a good phase of working from home. Although she did recently catch herself giving her Roomba a tuneup. Anyone up for a race?

Cohasset DTC presents Casino Gambling Forum

A public forum on the question of casino gambling in Massachusetts presented by the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee's "Cohasset Political Forum" from 7 to 9:30 p.m. Wednesday, March 26, at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 35 Ripley Road, Cohasset.

Three brief presentations by public figures and or authors on the subject of casino gambling will be presented followed by dialogue, questions and answers and invited public discussion on the subject of casino gambling in Massachusetts. The three formal participants are:

- Ted Carr - Cohasset Selectman and Executive with the Patrick Administration – with oversight authority over casino gambling.
- Professor Robert Goodman - author of the book "The Luck Business."
- Louise Haldeman - Casino gambling issue specialist from the Massachusetts League Of Woman Voters

The overriding purpose of the forum is to educate the public regarding casino gambling and to invite public discussion on this important public issue.

Overview and participant introductions by Kevin McCarthy, chair of the Cohasset Democratic Committee. The forum will be moderated by Tom Callahan, vice-chair of the Cohasset Democratic Committee and former Cohasset Town Selectman. The overriding purpose of the forum is to educate the public regarding casino gambling and to invite public discussion on this important public issue.

Free and open to the public.

NEW OFFICERS — The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee met last week following the Democratic primary to reorganize and elect new officers. Officers for the next term are: Kevin McCarthy, Chairman; Tom Callahan, Vice Chairman; Pat Laugelle, Treasurer; Ned Tebbetts, Affirmative Action officer; and Susan Kent, Secretary.

Special musical program offered

On Sunday, April 1, from 2 to 4 p.m., the Cohasset Historical Society will offer a special program titled "Popular Music of the Gaslight Era" by musician and educator, John Root.

Root both a vocalist and instrumentalist, presents programs on popular music from the first half of the 20th century for audiences of all ages. He brings a diverse repertoire of instrumental and vocal musical styles to his performances and demonstrates how song lyrics offer insights into the customs and values of a bygone period in our history. Through the music, we learn how the country's multicultural diversity at the turn of the previous century created unique musical styles that continue to delight and inspire audiences around the world.

The cost of this program is $10 per person and includes light refreshment. All are invited to the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St., in Cohasset for an afternoon of most enjoyable entertainment.

Selectmen candidates

Cohasset's TV talk show, Our Town, is featuring candidates for the Board of Selectmen. Co-host Mark DeGiacomo interviews incumbent Fred Koed, who is seeking reelection. Co-host Pat Martin talks with candidate Karen Quigley.

Tune in Mondays at 9p.m. on channel 10 or catch up on Tuesdays or Thursday at 9p.m.

Tune in Cohasset and stay informed.

Other examples of salt-marsh restoration

COMMENTARY

JANE AND MICHAEL RUSSELL

As the March 29th Town Meeting draws near, a lot of people in town naturally want to know more about the plan to restore Treats Pond as a salt marsh. Last week, the Friends of Treats Pond answered a list of frequently asked questions. Here are some additional thoughts you may want to consider as you weigh your vote.

The federal program to restore habitats like Treats Pond has been around for quite a while. Communities up and down the eastern seaboard of the U.S. have welcomed the funding as a way to preserve the environment, protect wildlife, and in some cases to control flooding. Today in Massachusetts, a number of federally subsidized Salt Marsh restorations are underway in cities and towns along the coast.

The list of Massachusetts cities and towns with salt marsh restorations in various stages of approval is extensive. On Cape Ann there is a great deal of support for restorations in the Towns of Ipswich, Essex, Gloucester and Rockport. The Association to Preserve Cape Cod is actively involved in salt marsh restorations in Bourne, Barnstable, Brewster, Wellfleet and Dennis. If Cohasset rejects the Treats Pond proposal, we already know our $1.1 million in federal funding will go to Quincy which has embarked on a major salt marsh restoration at Broad Meadows.

Worth mentioning is a $2 million salt marsh restoration that took place in 2000 in Sagamore, Mass. using the same federal program now being proposed for Treats Pond.

The Sagamore Marsh project was designed to restore an inlet cut off from the ocean in the 1930's by the widening of the Cape Cod Canal. Similar to the Treats Pond proposal, the Sagamore restoration project also involved an element of flood control.

Closer to home, the World's End salt marsh restoration at Damde Meadows in Hingham recently took advantage of federal, state and corporate grants to reconnect a freshwater habitat with the ocean. The 20-acre swamp had a lot in common with Treats Pond. It was cut off from the ocean tides way back in the 1630's by a road built by early settlers. Like Treats Pond, World's End became a stagnant, fresh water pool, choked by phragmites, offering no environmental value except perhaps for mosquitoes.

The World's End restoration project re-joined a marsh with the flushing action of Boston Harbor tides and the results have been highly successful. Today, it is once again a thriving salt water habitat, teeming with wildlife and adding important elements to the food chain in Boston Harbor that are vital to the waters of Massachusetts Bay and beyond.

Another great example of a federally subsidized salt marsh restoration is underway right now in Cohasset at Straits Pond. According to Weirriver.org, in the 1800's, Straits Pond was a tidal marsh connected to the ocean at Black Rock Beach. The marsh was dammed at the Black Rock end, however, and used as a reservoir for the operation of a gristmill at West Corner. This created a litany of environmental problems at Straits Pond that until recent years were left unchecked. Pollution, invasive plant species and midges were taking over the Straits Pond habitat.

Thanks to the diligence of our local Congressman, our state legislators, and community organizations, however, a total of $2.4 million in federal and state funding is now slated to address serious environmental issues at the pond while simultaneously regulating acceptable water levels. According to Weirriver.org, greater salt water flushing at Straits Pond will "have a positive effect on all of the sources of the pond's problems."

The positive environmental benefits of salt marsh restorations throughout Massachusetts have been quite clear. But the argument for the Treats Pond proposal, now up for consideration at Town Meeting, goes well beyond the environmental benefits it would produce. It will save the Town of Cohasset from having to fund and build a drainage system along Atlantic Avenue at an estimated cost of more than $1 million dollars. Please consider this factor when you vote on March 29th — and thanks for listening!

Jane and Michael Russell on behalf of the Friends of Treats Pond.

HEALTH NOTES

Water, water everywhere

By Steve Bobo and Jim Kinch
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Stormwater is now front and center — for Mariner subscribers it was on the front page and in half the articles of last week's paper. Flooding and proposed solutions occupied most of the newsprint and all of the emotion. Opposing solutions to the Treat's pond situation — flooding problems at the wastewater plant and the continuing saga of springtime woes for the residents along James Brook, are the litany of environmental issues that Cohasset faces as we focus on our annual town meeting.

Well everyone is talking and some even claim to have (or at least think they have) obvious solutions to the problem(s). How did we get here? And where are we going?

Maybe a moment to gather our thoughts and consider the options is in order. Have we suddenly arrived at some new place of crisis or has there been a steady transition from one point to a new equilibrium? As in complex issues the answer to both questions is yes.

Cohasset is changing, we are now building extravagant residences on lots once considered unbuildable and small cottages are giving way to 5000-6000 sq. ft. dwellings changing historic drainage patterns and redirecting runoff. Runoff and storm-water alterations are incremental and cumulative — it's a function of permeability and consideration. Development on impermeable ledge without consideration of storm-water runoff has combined to create a crisis. Add to this, wetter springs (and the potential for sea-level rise) and lowland flooding becomes chronic.

The real solution is appropriate regulation requiring each new development to consider its contribution to the volume of runoff. Each project must assess and describe how it will minimize any increase in total volume and rate of storm water leaving its site. Up until a few years ago runoff was a minor problem, an annoyance, but altered drainage pushed more surface water into streets and waterways forcing flooding upon those downstream. The MBTA construction has reduced the area of surface water recharge by almost one square mile. The current situation will require potentially complex and expensive efforts to mitigate. But unless the townspeople take positive action in the form of a new bylaw, forcing new construction and lot modifications to consider storm water runoff and design their projects in a way to minimize increased storm-water runoff and pollution the problem can only get worse.

On Monday night, the selectmen approved a final version of the Stormwater Bylaw. Moreover, they wisely provided for both the Treats Pond controversy and Jacob's Meadow to be covered in the townwide Flood Master Plan now going on to attack the stormwater issue in a holistic fashion. Some claim that projects affecting their homes are being left out of the Government's largesse in providing funding for their neighborhoods —not so! For example, remediation has already begun in the matter of Jacobs Meadow. Grants requested and approved subject to available funds. A bypass system has been designed for conveying treatment plant overflow out of Jacobs meadow during storm events. Plans have been reviewed for increasing flow through the tide gates, and upland remediation projects in Jacobs Meadow have been planned and funding identified.

The proposed Storm Water Bylaw in this year's warrant has been in development for over two years and has been reviewed by all major town boards. It needs the approval of the Townspeople to put into action a plan to stop this continuing slide into crisis. We urge all voters to read the bylaw, to listen to the debate at Town Meeting and to vote to support the bylaw — this is a crisis that demands action now.

Jim Kinch is a member of the Water Resource Protection Committee and Steve Bobo is a member of the Board of Health.

Questions raised on Treat's Pond

TO THE EDITOR:

It is heartening to see that the community is getting involved in the discussion about the complex issue that is being presented with the Treat's Pond Article, which raises more questions than the problem it is seeking to answer — the flooding surrounding the pond. In fact, the whole area between Lothrop Lane and Whitehead gets hit hard when the rain comes barreling down from the highlands all around. It seems particularly important for the sake of the houses on the lower plain to make sure that the established pond drainage, an easement defined by Article 4.2b of the Declaration of Restrictive Covenants filed with the Norfolk County Registry District of the Land Court as Document No. 388218 with attached sketch, be kept clear.

With regard to the pond itself, is the town of Cohasset legally obligated to uphold the Conservation Easement deeded to the town (by Deed of Easement filed with the Norfolk County Registry District as Document No. 259864) when Elizabeth Bigelow granted Treat's Pond to the town's care in 1964? It clearly states that Treat's Pond is not to be "altered from its natural state as a marsh pond." If the Town of Cohasset is allowing onto the town meeting warrant the Army Corps's (not a conservation organization) proposal to completely change the ecosystem to that of a salt pond, are they not ceding their obligation? Ought the town at least try to work within the parameters of the Conservation Commission Act, whose purposes are also cited in Mrs. Bigelow's easement deed, before even considering A.C.E.'s high-impact plan? How expensive could it possibly be to maintain or even improve upon an established drainage compared with blasting a 42-in. pipe 10 feet under a 250-yard course, including ledge, to get to Whale Meadow?

If phragmites is the problem, is it necessary to introduce salt water to the pond to get rid of it? Again, Mrs. Bigelow provided that "nor shall said pond be excavated or cleared except as may be necessary to remove debris, blow down and over growth…and I grant to the Town to enter upon the premises from time to time as may be necessary for said purposes…" Further, is the pond really dirtier than an increasing amount of flooded and rotting vegetation and a few wild birds can provide?

Let's get the jurisdiction of this pond back to the town or even state and allow the full gamut of conservation and engineering experts at hand, especially our own Storm Water Committee, to give another estimate than what A.C.E. has ruled out as impossible, the established drainage to Sandy Cove's southern end.

Treat's Pond 'realities'

TO THE EDITOR:

The cheapest (for Cohasset taxpayers) solution to the Treat's Pond mess is the expensive Army Corps of Engineers (ACE) plan, because two-thirds of its cost would be federally funded and some of the remainder state funded. The really cheap suggestion by several writers is not feasible; the only feasible alternative is a modified version of the ACE plan described below, which would not be federally funded. The ACE plan, by back flushing with ocean water, would restore Treat's Pond to its original state, thus being eligible for the federal funding. The modified version would eliminate back flushing (and federal assistance).

The existing drain is too small, and a deed restriction prevents it from being replaced, so a new drain in another location is required and the proposed new location avoids the frequent sand blockage at the exit of the existing drain. Extending the old drain does not solve the sand accretion problem, and of course it still would be too small.

Completing the Storm Water Plan is not likely to reveal sufficient rain garden or other ameliorating factors to significantly alter the floods of rainwater that the drain must deal with.

Clearly, the Town (not individual property owners) has the responsibility for diverting water from properties and providing drainage away from them. It is quite impractical for each property owner to lay drains from his or her property to some point of disposal.

The project cost of a modified ACE plan is not much reduced by providing only the needed (increased) drainage, and foregoing back-flushing of sea water to kill the phragmites, restore the original salt water marsh, reduce mosquitoes, reduce the build up of decaying phragmites, and improve water absorption of the marsh floor. An adequate drain cannot be installed at the current location, so the new drain would be installed through Whale Meadow same as with the ACE plan, with the same permitting and easement cost, almost the same cost for trenching, pipe laying and land restoration. The cost of a tide gate would be eliminated, and perhaps the trench less deep.

So, is this minor saving worth foregoing the Federal grant, which would pay two-thirds of the estimated cost, and perhaps also foregoing or reducing state grants? Even with the Federal grant and the anticipated state grant, Cohasset's share is painful. But not nearly as painful as going it alone with some partial solution that is not eligible for grants.

Of course, we probably will not bite the bullet at Town Meeting. While diddling with some supposedly less costly scheme the Federal grant we might have had may be re-allotted to some other Town, with the help of its Congressman; some Town that has had the wit and appropriate greed to embrace a plan that fits grant requirements. Unfortunately, passionate and eloquent rhetoric at Town Meeting will obscure and dilute the presentation and consideration of the realities. Admittedly, what is reality to one may seem fantasy to another (hence the quotation marks in the title).

Design a logo for Cohasset contest

In order to create a stronger identity/image for the Town of Cohasset, the EDC needs your good ideas and artistic talents to fulfill its objective of better marketing the town we are all so proud of.

All are invited to participate in a friendly and fun competition: professionals or amateurs, grownups or kids. The winner will receive his/her logo on tee shirts, the public recognition of the community, not to mention "the artist's immortality."

The mission — if you should accept it — is to design a graphic identity for Cohasset that encapsulates and expresses best the beauty or the unique character of the town. You are free to use scenes, monuments, symbols, letters, or whatever, so long as it evokes Cohasset and no other town. Keep in mind that, to be effective, a logo should be small, clear and simple. The dominant color that needs to be used is the blue/green shade of PMS 3275*.

The deadline to submit your designed logo to the EDC, care of Alain Pinel, EDC, c/o Town Clerk's Office, Town Hall is April 11. In early April, a special Logo Selection Panel will be created (composed of one member of the South Shore Art Center, one graphic specialist and one member of the EDC), to choose the best design.

The winning logo will be trademarked and featured on Cohasset approved marketing and clothing items to be sold through local vendors. It will be on display this summer at the South Shore Art Center's Art Festival.

Q&A on affordable housing

The following Q&As were prepared by the Housing Partnership. Its charge is to encourage the creation and preservation of affordable housing by serving as an information resource to town officials, developers and the general public, and as a facilitator in the process of creating affordable housing. The Partnership membership is comprised of townspeople with legal, architectural, banking, real estate, conservation, communication and community housing backgrounds.

• Why does Cohasset need affordable housing?

The state's Chapter 40B law mandates that in all cities and towns, 10 percent of the total housing stock be affordable to those whose household incomes are 80 percent or less of area median incomes. A) we must comply and B) whether we agree with the mandate or not, we believe there is both a value and need to create diversified housing, for the town's municipal workers, for young starter families who grew up in Cohasset and for downsizing seniors with limited assets. We should remember that Cohasset historically has always been a town of economic diversity, notwithstanding a stereotype of catering only to upper level incomes. Legally, historically, sociologically and morally, we believe it makes sense to meet the needs of all income levels.

• How far away are we from meeting the 10 percent affordable housing?

We are currently under 3 percent. All of our current affordable units are provided by the Housing Authority, which serves another segment of the affordable market. The Town has developed zero units of non-CHA affordable housing since the law's passage in 1969. See chart.

• What about the large developments like Avalon Bay, the Cook Estate, Cedermere and the Transit Oriented District (TOD) to be built next to the T parking lot on Route 3A?

If all projects come on line as permitted, they greatly increase our denominator of total housing units, to over 3,000 dwellings, thus raising our 10 percent target. Because the state allows all rental units within a 40B project to be added to the inventory, even the market units, all of Avalon's 200 units would be added to the affordable inventory, a significant leap forward to 10 percent. Accounting for known development, and assuming Avalon gets built, at the recalculation of our percentage with the 2010 census, we believe we will be closer to, but still a little bit short of, the 10 percent mandate. We hope, however, to bring enough units on line in the short term to qualify for a 40B moratorium. Our goal is to avoid another large 40B that would stress the Town's resources, and close the small gap with small, well-scaled development.

• What's the difference between 40B law and what the Housing Partnership does?

We have no control over large 40B law projects that come uninvited to our town because they can take advantage of bypassing our zoning bylaws. However, using the Local Initiative Program, where 40B-type development is achieved with the assistance and cooperation of the town, there is the welcome element of local control, with the developer working with the town rather than in conflict with it. By being proactive with this process, we can develop projects more in character with the town and more responsive to its needs, and show the state enough progress to hopefully keep the large, unwelcome project at bay.

• What about some of the smaller projects that have been presented?

There are two small projects in the works that will add 6 countable rental units. The TOD project on 3A adds 2 more. We welcome similar small scale projects.

• What else has the Partnership done to determine the town's desire for affordability?

We sent out an anonymous questionnaire to all town employees, which asked for information about income levels, among other questions, to help determine local need for affordable housing. Unfortunately, the number of responses was too low to effectively measure the data. However, what data was received indicates that many of our town employees could qualify for affordable housing (depending on their total household income). Presently, it is difficult for employees to live in the town in which they work. An interesting statistic is that of our 29 firefighters, only five live in the town. Of the 20 police and dispatchers, only five live here. It is important not to stereotype and to realize that those who would live in such housing are not some far off strangers who will be encouraged to come to Cohasset, but people we know and work with and depend on each day. In the projects we work on, we hope to take advantage of the state-permitted local preference, where up to 70% of affordable units can be set aside for workers, children and seniors with a Cohasset connection.

• What are the Partnership's plans?

The Partnership will continue to identify potential sites where affordability can be achieved. We will seek a role as partner and facilitator, but leave the main job of developing to the private development community. We will always approach projects with neighborhood and environmental sensibilities in mind. We are investigating the development potential of a town-owned tract of land bounded by the Music Circus, Osgood School, Pleasant Street and Smith Place. If conditions allow, it might support a small cluster-type of affordable development that could fill our anticipated 40B gap, while still retaining the vast majority of the site as green space and wildlife habitat. Hingham is pursuing a similar project on town land off Beal St. It would be attractive because of the subsidy provided by making the land available, given today's land costs. Also, identifying any opportunities similar to the 821 Jerusalem Road project, where we convert existing housing stock and thus add affordable units without necessarily adding to the denominator of total housing units, is a desirable end.

• What bylaws can enable the town to create more affordable stock?

We are coming forward at this Town Meeting with the creation of a housing trust, a tool to allow us to more readily engage in the marketplace. It will also provide a funding vehicle. Funding is anticipated to come from existing CPC housing funds and developer contributions, not general tax revenue. More detailed Q&As about the trust will be published next week. We have also worked on an amendment to our existing inclusionary zoning bylaw. This bylaw would mandate creation of some affordable units in any project of 5 units or greater, or the alternative of paying a buy-out fee into the housing trust. This bylaw will both help us achieve the 10 percent threshold, and then maintain us at 10 percent as new development adds to our total housing stock. That bylaw will be brought forward in the fall.

COHASSET'S AFFORDABLE HOUSING INVENTORY

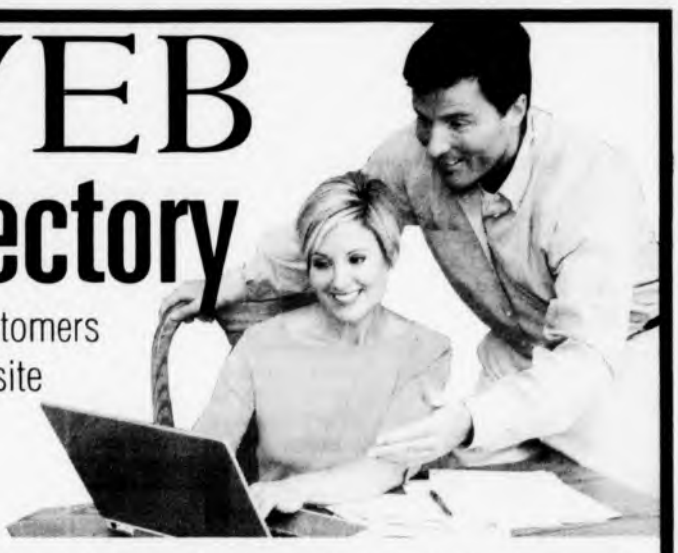
THE LEGAL OBLIGATION: 10 percent of total housing stock deemed affordable to persons whose total household income is 80% or < of Area Median Income (AMI)

	TOTAL HOUSING UNITS	AFFORDABLE REQUIRED (10%)	AFFORDABLE ACTUAL
2000 Census Numbers
DHCD's calculation	2,752	275	76
Master Plan & Housing Part.'s Calculations	2,805	281	76
	Shortfall = 199-205 units
Anticipated 2010 Census Recalculation
Assessors' Records as of 3/08	2,913	291	76	(2.61%)
If Sunrise Assisted Living counted	2,975	298	76	(2.55%)
	Shortfall = 215-222 units
Known development in pipeline	+279	+28	+208
If Cedarmere built as permitted	+105	+11	+27
	Shortfall (depending on Cedarmere) = 19-41 units

CONCLUSIONS: Need to fill state-mandated affordable gap of 19-41 units to achieve 10 percent
Until gap filled, and assuming no moratorium available, we are at risk for unfriendly project
Moratorium available if 13-14 units built in next year (up to 8 in pipeline now)
End of Avalon appeals & its bldg. permits would also achieve moratorium
Need to maintain 10 percent threshold going forward as new development is permitted

NOTES: Existing 76 units are all Housing Authority units
Non-CHA units qualifying for inventory developed since 1969 = 0

Selectmen finalize budget numbers



A fiscal 2009 town operating budget of $36,374,463 will be presented to Town Meeting. The Board of Selectmen unanimously supported the budget as presented by Town Manager Bill Griffin. The budget (article 3) will need to get final approval from Town Meeting on March 29.

The final budget includes some changes from the original budget message presented in January. Notably, in his final budget Griffin increased the schools budget $50,000 over his original recommended budget and allocated an additional $38,000 to the DPW. Griffin was able to make these adjustments due to the restoration of lottery aid and a decrease in the South Shore Vocational School Assessment.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

For Sewer Commission candidates: Growth in the village is largely impossible due to sewer capacity. Yet, the economic health of the village is fragile. What steps could the Sewer Commission be taking to address this issue?

SEWER COMMISSION/ Jim Dow

The growth and economic health in the village is of vital importance to the Town. This will ultimately be dependent upon the ability of the area to discharge wastewater flows and provide uninterrupted sewer service.

Capacity at the wastewater treatment plant remains the key focus on most every issue that the Sewer Commission will be facing in the near future. We need to insure that all of the flow going through the plant is indeed wastewater. Extraneous flows from outside sources place an undue burden on the system and create a situation of wasted capacity.

A significant amount of money has been allotted to remediate I&I from the system. There are many ways to utilize these funds to detect the sources of the problem, formulate a repair plan and remove the excess flow. Run-off from roof leaders, flows from sewer connected sump pumps, broken and damaged pipes underground and loose or unsealed manhole covers are major sources of I&I. Sewer pipe integrity inspections can be completed using specially designed cameras and smoke testing of the sewer lines can be done to determine improprieties in the system. Once the source of the non-wastewater flows are identified and removed, the system will work as it was designed to. This will eliminate the overflow concerns and open the possibility of further connections to the system.

The Little Harbor project will add a significant amount of flow to the system but the village area would most likely benefit from the gained capacity as well. Access to a public sanitary sewer system that will handle the flows is the primary concern and is a very important key for expansion and economic growth.

SEWER COMMISSION/ Wayne Sawchuk

The Cohasset Sewer Commissioners have put a moratorium on new sewer connections in the Village Business District to ensure that adequate capacity will be available for the existing 810 sewer customers and allow time to make improvements to the existing plant. The improvements will boost the plant capacity to 450,000 gallons per day, which will serve the existing and 450 new customers located in the Little Harbor area.

While the plant expansion proceeds, the Commissioners are also undertaking a study of the inflow and infiltration problem which exists in the current collection system, a draft of which is expected to be released before the March Town Meeting.

I believe the Sewer Commissioners have the ability to lift the moratorium on the Village Business Area, if they choose, based on individual applications that the Board determines would not impact negatively on the operation of the plant or increase the flows significantly.

I have three ideas that could be pursued to allow additional renovations and improvements in the Village Business Area, if necessary, in order to keep the character and economic vitality of the Village intact.

• First, allow businesses to expand if they can reduce flows in the immediate area by contributing to the cost of fixing Inflow and Infiltration problems identified by Town engineers, if money is not available to perform this work.

• Provide water saving devices such as low flush toilets and water saving shower heads and allow savings to be used elsewhere.

• Consider alternative sewage treatment methods for the Village Business District which do not involve sending additional flows to the plant.

The ideas I have presented are intended to improve our public sewer infrastructure and operation by fixing leaks and reducing overall flows in the Village Business Area, which will have a positive impact for the entire Town.

For Selectman candidates: As "generalists" representing the entire town, when should the Board of Selectmen get involved in the business of other elected and appointed boards or commissions?

SELECTMAN/ Karen Quigley

Cohasset's elected and appointed boards, commissions and committees are separate and operate autonomously from the Board of Selectmen.

However, independent and cooperative are not mutually exclusive. It is my belief that respect and communication among all town entities is in Cohasset's best interests.

The Board of Selectmen sets the overall tone, policy and direction of town government and should be interested in, and apprised of all facets of town government. In my view, this can be best accomplished not by working monolithically but cooperatively.

Selectmen must recognize the independence of boards, commissions and committees while maintaining oversight of the town's overall well being. Understanding how authority and responsibility flows through town government is a critical skill for a selectman.

As Selectman I would not seek to meddle nor to micromanage, but to open channels of communication and to foster cooperation.

SELECTMAN/Fred Koed

That depends.

When Selectmen assist others navigate the complexities of local government and mediate disputes, the public good is best served.

While it is true the Selectmen comprise the chief "executive branch", there are other realms and various checks and balances. By law the selectmen must respect the "fiscal autonomy" of the school committee, meaning selectmen can recommend a total dollar amount for the schools, but have no legal say in how the money is divided and spent.

Other elected and appointed boards and committees have statutory powers vested in them by the Great and General Court of Massachusetts. For instance, the water commissioners are responsible for running the water department, etc. In our local government, one must always remember that the "ultimate authority" is town meeting and town election (an extension of town meeting). Town meeting is the main arena where the selectmen (along with advisory) have a voice on the floor in making "recommendations" to the voters.

I have serious concerns and notice the frustrations when hard working boards and commissions are repeatedly sent back to the drawing board in search of "the perfect article" that will solve every imaginable contingency. To paraphrase Voltaire – "The perfect then becomes the enemy of the good." Are our challenges really better off remaining unresolved by postponing an article that is 99 percent good? Yes, the public good is a balance, but the price for perfection and subsequent inaction, may be perverse consequences.

I see my role as being respectful, considerate and as supportive as possible of various town boards and committees, especially when before the selectmen. I recognize that wisdom exists across town government, not just with the selectmen. Over time, Cohasset has become more complex. Local government depends on a good number of concerned, interested and active citizens participating fully.

For Planning Board candidates: We're not sure the public understands the different roles of the planning and zoning boards. Does the Planning Board have a role when it comes to zoning issues and could there be better communication between the planning board and ZBA?

PLANNING BOARD/ Charles Samuelson

The Zoning Bylaws along with Mass General Laws Section 40a define the "rules" under which the town administers its use of land and provisioning of other resources such as water, sewer, schools, etc. The Planning Board is chartered to interpret and enforce these rules – a more or less "judiciary" role. The Planning Board is also chartered to manage the process for amending the Zoning Bylaws (hold hearings, etc.).

All building construction projects require a permit form the Building Inspector. The Building Inspector may only issue a permit if the anticipated work conforms to the Zoning Bylaws. When the project does not conform to the Zoning Bylaws a Special Permit or Variance is required. The Building Inspector must obtain a decision from the Zoning Board of Appeals or a Site Plan (in the case of non-conforming use) approved by the Planning Board before issuing a permit. The Special Permit and Variance process is administered by the Zoning Board of Appeals. Any interested party (for example, an abutter) can also initiate an appeal. As part of the appeals process the Zoning Board of Appeals is required to obtain written recommendations from the Planning Board.

The Zoning Board of Appeals is not required to accept the recommendations of the Planning Board. This is where there is the possibility of ambiguity and or disagreement in interpretation.

The primary idea is to facilitate use where there are reasonable exceptions to the strict interpretation of the Zoning Bylaws. No set of rules can be expected to cover every possible future condition or contingency. That is the purpose of the appeals process. This is the case where the Zoning Board of Appeals, the Building Inspector and the other town Boards should work together to come to consensus. Although a potentially time consuming and difficult process where the conclusion may remain open for a particular stakeholder, the result is some degree of "status quo". The resolution may finally require litigation in superior court or land court, or an amendment to the Zoning Bylaws.

PLANNING BOARD/ Clark Brewer

The March 7, Mariner, Mary Ford asked about the communication between the planning and zoning boards. I reviewed and simplified the following based on the Town website.

The zoning board , appointed by the Selectmen , is responsible to hear and decide on Building Inspector permit appeals based on the zoning bylaw. They review and render decisions on special permits and variances.

The planning board is elected with a strong role in zoning issues. This is both proactive and reactive in nature holding public hearings. Their responsibility includes the study of Town needs or potential and preparing related plans. They write, review, update, modify and publish the Master Plan and official map. They draft, submit zoning amendments and make recommendations for Town Meeting. They review and render decisions for all subdivision filings and Form A (conforms to zoning) applications, site Plan Review and Special Permits. They review and make recommendations for Large Home Review filings.

The boards are similar and both grant different permits. Opportunities for collaboration to improve permitting include the bylaw committee and the design review board. The public process of permitting and complex legal language can be hard for people who just want to add a porch or chimney to their house. I recently attended a regional planning meeting on zoning reform. Both Charles Higginson of the ZBA and Fred Koed of the Board of Selectmen participated making a good representation for Cohasset. It would be great for all boards and committees to have an annual forum, in order to review plans for the year ahead, discuss ideas, identify problems and finding common ground for shared goals in the future.

For School Committee candidate: It is rumored that more Cohasset students are going to private high schools than ever before. Is this the case? And does it have more to do with parents' ability to pay for a private education or the quality of a Cohasset High School education?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Alfred Slanetz

A parent only gets one chance to educate and develop the character of their child. Each child is unique and one must choose the right school to develop and motivate that child to their fullest potential and give them a well-rounded global perspective. We are fortunate to have many excellent public and private schools in Massachusetts. As a School Committee Member, one goal is to make Cohasset Schools a competitive choice.

Last year, 64 of our 1473 students left Cohasset for private schools. While most grades saw 0 to 5 students leaving, attrition was prevalent following 6th grade (15/123) and 8th grade (25/114). In our survey, 1/3rd of parents checked the primary reason was their student not being challenged to reach his/her full potential. To quote parents:

"While we had 2 or 3 excellent teachers during our time in Cohasset, the large classes and emphasis on students who are failing/misbehaving meant our child didn't receive much attention/personalized experience. In years with bad teachers our child learned how to get by doing very little. In addition, the curriculum is broad with facts (because of MCAS) but doesn't provide in depth knowledge/writing & debating/discussion skills. The curriculum is too focused on the US & not enough on the World. Also, too focused on boys sports, not enough on the arts".

Improvement suggestions: "Smaller classes/personalized learning. Less reliance on discipline and more reliance on learning by example/respect differences. Improve Math teaching. Teach kids how to think rather than what to think. More drama/music"

"Stronger teams at Deer Hill, staff consistency at the Middle School and more academic courses/ offerings at the High School."

By establishing goals and implementing improvements, we are addressing many of these issues. Attrition should moderate as Cohasset becomes a more competitive choice relative to Massachusetts' private schools.

NEXT WEEK'S QUESTIONS

For School Committee candidate: Are the schools the right place to tackle substance abuse among teens and how bad is the alcohol-drug problem at the middle-high school?

For Selectman candidates: What "grade" would you give Selectmen on their handling of the Treat's Pond issue so far, and where do you stand on the Treat's Pond issue?

For Sewer Commission candidates: Those with septic systems often learn to be careful about what they put down the drain. Would it be beneficial to educate and or encourage sewer users not to give up their old septic system habits? And is there a future for "gray-water" gardens and other initiatives?

For Planning Board candidates: The Planning Board has to balance the rights of an individual property owner to build what he/she wants and the presumed rights of the community at large. Drainage and stormwater runoff are examples. As a Planning Board member, how do you plan to balance those rights?

Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Tuesday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)

Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Tuesday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers, short position statements and the like.

All candidates, opposed or unopposed, may submit a photograph and formal announcement.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

Election supper is April 3

The Annual Election Supper, a springtime tradition, will be held at the Beechwood Congregational Church on Church Street. Candidates and voters are invited to get together for dinner on Thursday evening, April 3, at 6:30. Dinner will include roast pork, roast potatoes, carrots, Harvard beets, dessert as well as beverages. Before dinner, all candidates will be introduced. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children. Reserve your tickets by calling 781-383-1298.

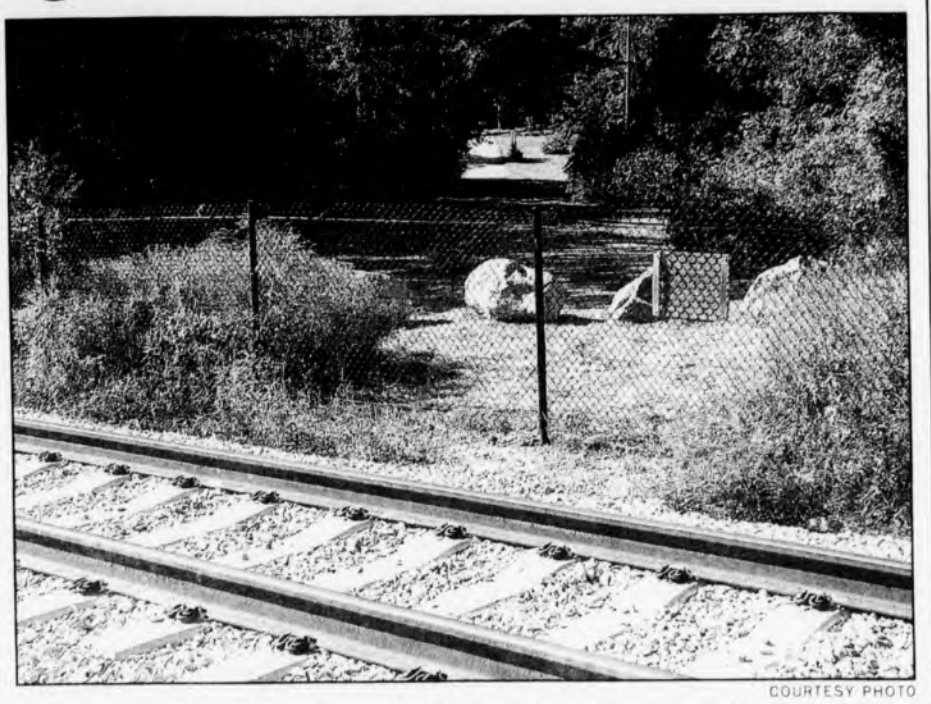
Happy ending for 'train-blocked' homeowners

Legal access to property granted

By Brian P. Nanos and Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Thanks to Scituate's Zoning Board of Appeals, some residents finally have a legal way to come and go from their home near the Cohasset-Scituate line.

The board voted Thursday to allow the owners of a Cohasset home legal access to a shared driveway in Scituate.



That Cohasset home, owned by Rosalie Lucki and Peter Collins, was cut off from its original driveway by the restoration of the Greenbush line. Though the homeowners didn't know it, that driveway, Lincoln Lane, was legally designated as a farm road, which should only be accessed by people who are farming. So, when the Greenbush line bisected the road, the MBTA planned no grade crossing for that road, therefore cutting off access to the home.

Instead, the MBTA contractors connected the home at 425 South Main St. to Gannett Pasture Way, a private driveway in Scituate. That driveway, however, was also illegal. It was already shared by three Scituate homes, the maximum allowed by Scituate zoning laws. And, the driveway extension built by the MBTA contractors crossed land owned by developer Ledgewood Estates Inc., though that company has since agreed to allow the homeowners access to that drive.

"So, essentially the MBTA land-locked these people in their house," Scituate zoning board member Brian Sullivan said at Thursday's hearing.

In the more than two years since the original driveway was bisected, the homeowners have been illegally using the shared driveway while pleading with local and state officials, as well as the driveway's landowners, to obtain legal access to their homes.

In order to gain legal access, the homeowner's needed to purchase an easement from the driveway's landowners as well as seek relief from the zoning bylaws to be the fourth house on a private driveway.

COURTESY PHOTO

Looking toward the house from what used to be Lincoln Lane, a small private lane. There are several other houses on the lane but the Collins house was the only one cut off.

"It's been a very long process and I was happy to help negotiate the issue to a successful resolution."
State Rep. Garrett Bradley

When its contractors first bisected the original driveway, the MBTA hired a local attorney to draft an agreement between the homeowners and their neighbors on Gannett Pasture Lane to bring before the Scituate zoning board for a variance.

Signatures from the neighbors on Gannett Pasture Lane and the Collinses were obtained this past summer. However, the proposal never made it as far as the board, and the MBTA informed its attorney it would no longer be assisting the homeowners with their access issues.

With Greenbush construction winding down in the early fall of last year, with a letter Lucki appealed to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen who in turn asked state Rep. Garrett Bradley for help.

In the late fall, Bradley began a series of meetings to bring all the involved parties back to the table, including the MBTA. The MBTA, lawyers for the driveway property owners and lawyers for the homeowners met to work toward a resolution.

Bradley said he used his law background to help mediate the situation, explaining he found that each party had weaknesses in their case. Rather than each party spending significant legal fees by taking the issue to court, Bradley said he tried to show a resolution now was a better solution for all involved parties.

Through negotiation the easement purchase price was dropped significantly, Bradley said. In the end, Bradley said the homeowners agreed to pay 80 percent of the easement purchase price and, after the MBTA saw the homeowners' significant personal investment, the MBTA agreed to pay the remaining 20 percent for the easement rights.

"It's been a very long process and I was happy to help negotiate the issue to a successful resolution," Bradley said in a phone interview.

The last step in the process came last Thursday when Scituate's Zoning Board of Appeals granted a variance to allow the fourth home legal access to the driveway.

"All good things must come to an end," Sullivan joked. He told the homeowners' lawyer, "Tonight the zoning board is going to put your clients out of their misery."

Antique Appraisal Day returning to Cohasset

Skinner Inc. Appraisers are coming to Cohasset again for the second Antique Appraisal Day. Mark calendars for Saturday, March 29, to bring antiques to be appraised. For large pieces, several good photographs can be used by the appraiser. Be sure to include photos of any special markings, numbers or other details that may assist in the appraisal process.

This event is sponsored by the Friends of Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs and will take place at St. Anthony's Parish Center, 10 Summer St., Cohasset, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Appraisals are $10 per item, or $25 for three items. Excluded items include coins, stamps, jewelry and musical instruments. As people had to be turned away from the last appraisal day, a maximum of three items per individual will be allowed.

As people had to be turned away from the last appraisal day, a maximum of three items per individual will be allowed.

Snacks and refreshments will be available to enjoy while waiting to meet with the appraiser.

For more information, call Cohasset Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112 or John Campbell, president of the Friends at 617-909-5687.

Decals honor Tim Mahoney

The Cohasset Fire Department is selling blue and white decals featuring Tim Mahoney's initials and the No. 9, which was Tim's jersey number for both the hockey and lacrosse teams at Scituate High where he was a sophomore.

Tim's father, Frank Mahoney, is a Cohasset Fire Captain.

The decals, which sell for $5 each, are available at the Cohasset Fire Headquarters on Elm Street or by calling 781-383-0616. Every dollar we take in will go to the Timothy J. Mahoney Memorial Fund, which has been set up at Scituate Federal Savings Bank, 72 Front St., Scituate, MA 02066.

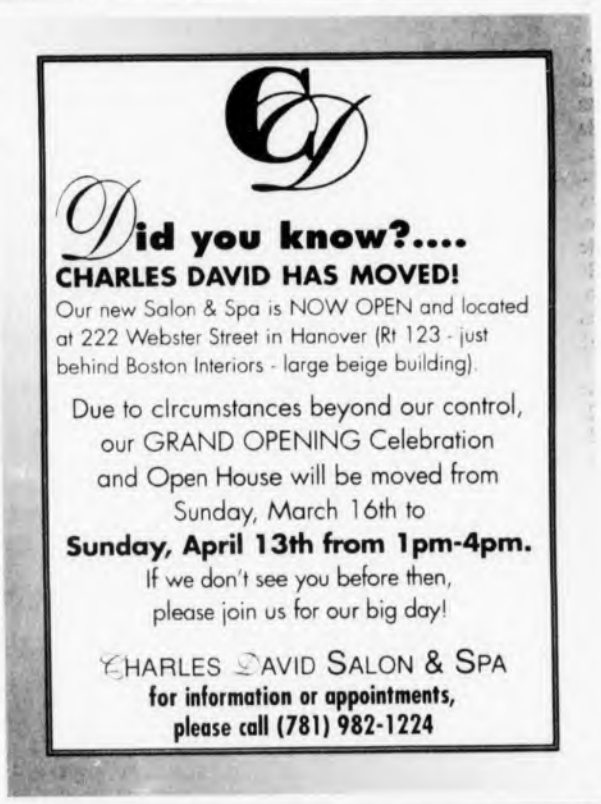
Tim, 16, was killed in a single-car accident Feb. 2 on Route 3A between Mendel Road and Pond Street. The driver, Chris Barrow, 18, and a senior at Scituate High, remains hospitalized.

Free cash expenditures noted

Town Meeting will be asked to vote on supplemental appropriation to fund four different areas currently falling short in the fiscal 2008 budget. The four items total $175,000 and the money would come out of free cash. Due to a large amount on-going litigation, primarily relating to the Zoning Board of Appeals and the Planning Board, $75,000 is requested to transfer to the legal services budget.

The Planning Board has requested $10,000 to fund an update of the zoning bylaws into a clean, up-to-date document. The current copy of the bylaw does not include significant changes passed at Town Meeting over the past few years, including the TOD bylaw, inclusionary zoning bylaw and the village business district.



Due to overtime expenses primarily due to long-term paid absences of employees, vacant positions and mandatory manning requirement, the Police Department needs an additional $80,000.

Lastly, the facilities maintenance budget is requesting a $10,000 supplemental appropriation due to overtime expenses and snow removal requirements.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said there are other budgets that will require additional funding (primarily utilities, fuel expenses and unemployment), but those shortfalls could be addressed later in the fiscal year through budget-to-budget transfers or the reserve fund.

The Selectmen recommended the article to Town Meeting unanimously.

Skippers win overtime thriller in final

Cohasset sent into frenzy at Garden

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

BOSTON—Cohasset Middle High School and Manchester-Essex Regional Middle High School have a number of similarities. Both schools are nearly identical in population size. The Hornets are nestled between Beverly and Gloucester on Boston's North Shore. The Skippers are on the water between Scituate and Hingham, due south of the big city.

The parallels continued on the basketball court Tuesday afternoon during Cohasset's thrilling, 44-36, overtime win in the Division 4 State championship at the TD Banknorth Garden.

"I was telling their point guard (Lizzy Ball) what to run for offense, the two teams looked exactly alike," Cohasset head coach John LeVangie joked after the game. "We both try and go low to the big kids and that part of it was important. (Manchester-Essex) has the same style. The difference in the game was one or two turnovers but other than that, it was really pretty even."

LeVangie waited 25 years to get back to a state title game after leading Boston College High School in 1981 and 1983. The Eagles lost both times. Tuesday's win had special meaning for the long time high school basketball coach and guidance councilor.

"This means more to me than anything else in the world," LeVangie said. "It's incredible."

The South Shore League Champion Skippers finished the season with a 23-2 record. Their last loss came against Sacred Heart in late December. Cohasset won 21 straight games since the loss to the Saints, including five straight in the South Sectional and State tournament.

Tuesday's win capped off the astonishing run.

"It's unbelievable, I can't even put it in words," junior point guard Kayla Farren said after the game. "We are State Champions."

Fellow captain Carly Salerno was equally excited after the win.

"I never thought I would be holding that trophy we got," she said. "I never thought I'd be able to hold that, but now it's ours."

Future stars in alignment

Youth is served in Cohasset's state title run

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

It's well documented that the Cohasset High girls basketball team doesn't have a single senior on its roster. That singular fact may be the most glaringly amazing aspect of the 2007-2008 Skippers.

They are mature beyond their years.

The small school, small town, small everything mantra couldn't be played up in the South sectionals and State tournament because it was a field of Cohasset's peers.

The Skippers dismissed them all accordingly: Bishop Connolly, West Bridgewater, Nantucket, Millis and finally Manchester Essex.

Small school yes, small heart no. Facing long odds back in early December, the then 2-2 Skippers embraced the one day at a time philosophy and started winning ball games.

They haven't lost since. At this rate they might not lose again for a very long time.

When asked what he thought was so special about this team after Tuesday's win, head coach John LeVangie almost jumped in excitement.

"The chemistry," he said. "They are a very close group. They are very compassionate. They have a work ethic. If they have a bad game they know how to react to setbacks."

Cohasset's road to the Div. 4 state title

The Cohasset girls basketball team earned the No. 2 seed in the Div. 4 South Sectional bracket with an 18-2 regular season record.

From there, the Skippers won five straight games to capture the program's first state title in two decades. Here is a look back at their journey through the South Sectional and State tournament.

Preliminary round: Bye

First round: Cohasset 50, Bishop Connolly 41

Second round: Cohasset 55, West Bridgewater 31

Semi-final round: Cohasset 52, Nantucket 32

Sectional final: Cohasset 42, Millis 30

State final: Cohasset 44, Manchester-Essex 36

Cohasset finished the 2007-08 regular season with a 23-2 record.

Skippers win overtime thriller in final

FROM SKIPPERS, PAGE 17

Hornets 11-3 in overtime, led by a pair of baskets by Sammi Lehr in the paint. Lehr finished the game with a team high 13 points after battling the Hornets Dani Ciccone (five points) all game.

"She was tough," Lehr said. "She was definitely as strong and as tall as I am so it was one of the hardest matches of the year, but I had to keep my cool."

The biggest play of the game came from the Skippers Meredith Kelly late in regulation. The Hornets had the ball leading 31-30 with 37 seconds left in the fourth quarter, when Kelly reached in the passing lane and stole the ball. She raced down court and was fouled.

Kelly had ice in her veins as she nailed both free throws.

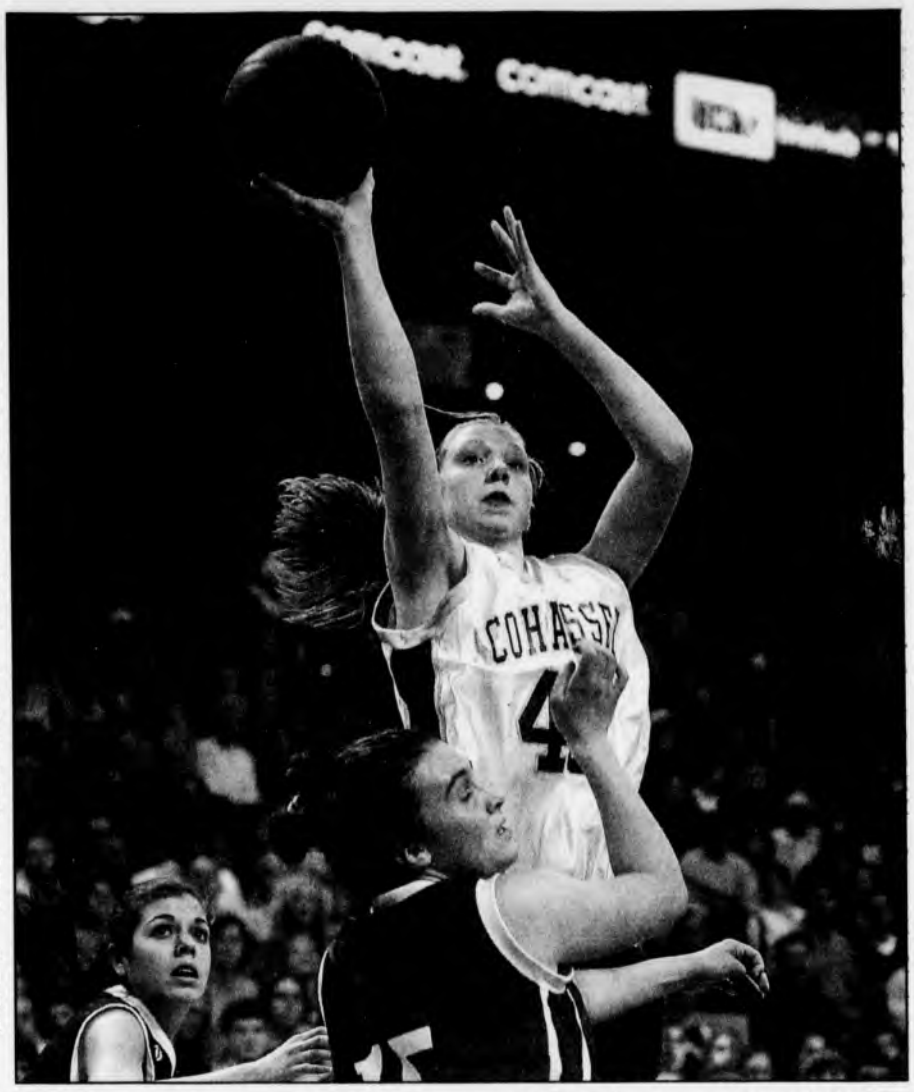
"I looked up at the scoreboard and I was like, 'we're down, I need to step up' and I just jumped in the passing lane," Kelley said. "I thought, 'I'm either going to make it or I'm going to get fouled,' and when I got fouled, I knew I was going to have to make those two shots."

"I looked up at the scoreboard and I was like, 'we're down, I need to step up' and I just jumped in the passing lane."'
Meredith Kelly

On the Hornets ensuing possession, Ciccone missed a shot from the paint and Sammi Lehr grabbed the rebound and was fouled. She hit one-of-two from the line giving Cohasset a 33-31 lead with 22.6 seconds to play in the fourth quarter.

After a timeout, Ball brought the ball up court for Manchester-Essex and found Ciccone for a game-tying basket with six seconds to play. Kelly had a shot for the game winner in overtime, but good defense by the Hornets forced overtime.

"Both teams played hard nosed defense," LeVangie said. "There wasn't an easy basket to get."



The Hornets took the first lead in the 4:00 overtime on an Elsa Keefe free throw. On Cohasset's next possession, Farren hit a lay-up that gave the Skippers a lead they wouldn't relinquish.

The Hornets missed a pair of free throws, and Sammi Lehr scored inside off an inbounds pass with four seconds on the shot clock to give the Skippers a 37-34 lead.

Manchester-Essex would get the score within one on a Jen Bishop jump shot with 1:20 to play, but the Cohasset defense clamped down. A Kelly lay-in, followed by a Hornets turnover that led to a Tori Lehr basket all but sealed the deal.

A pair of Salerno free throws gave Cohasset a 42-36 lead with 8.2 seconds left and the lid blew off the Garden.

"Surreal," Salerno said about the win. "It's the only thing I can think of because we did it at the Garden. Now it's just live the life."

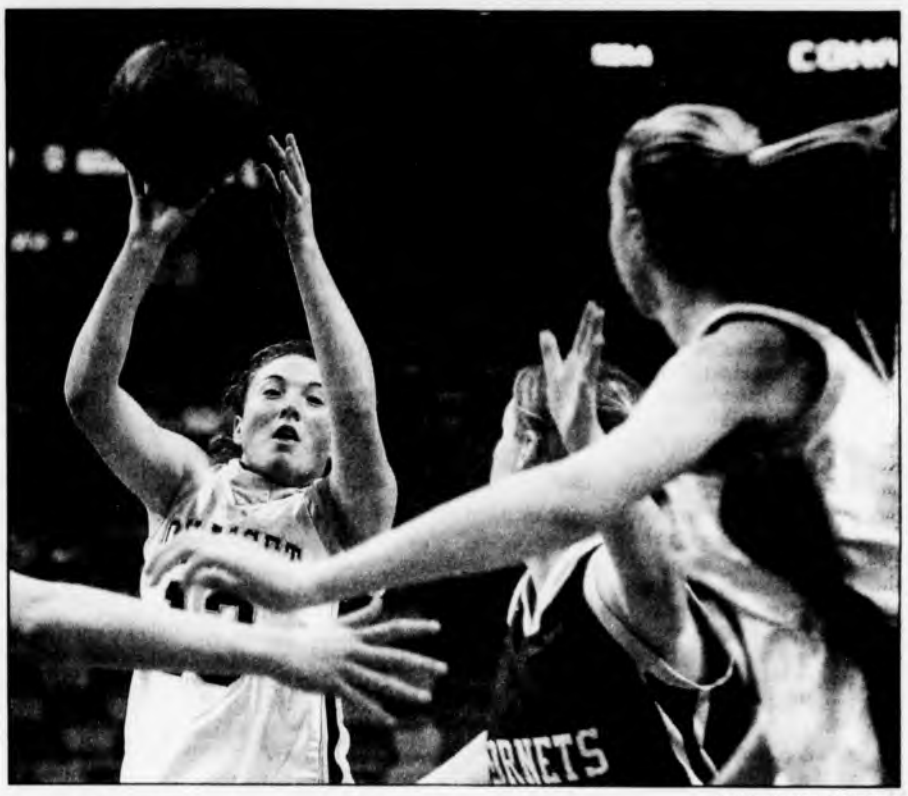
Future stars in alignment

FROM STARS, PAGE 17

The joy in his eyes could have lit up Las Vegas. Carly Salerno and Kayla Farren said they had never seen coach LeVangie so happy. He was in agreement. But all he would really talk about was the team that finally helped him win his first state title.



"They have learned a lot of life skills," LeVangie said about the young group. "Get their names because they are going to be the head of big companies down the road, 15-20 years from now. I really mean that, I have been a guidance councilor for 42 years and these are people you are going to here from. They are special."

It takes a special bunch to win a state title. A lot of fortitude (holding off the Millis press at the end of the South sectional final). A bad win here (Bishop Connolly). A good win there (the follow-up against West Bridgewater). Good timing (Meredith Kelly's steal against Manchester-Essex). And a little luck (sprinkled in everywhere).

But for all 10 girls, Rachel Fredey, Carli Haggerty, Lindsay Davis, Meredith Kelly, Samantha Crough, Carly Salerno, Kayla Farren, Tori Lehr, Isabelle Franklin and Sammi Lehr, the last few weeks are much bigger than basketball.

When LeVangie said he was "more excited for them than anything else," after winning the South sectional final, he was referring to the people that won the game, not the players.

And this group of people has a very bright future ahead of them in basketball and in life.

Get Active on Mexican Riviera Cruise

Fran Golden
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Puerto Vallarta, Mexico -

A-yeee. That's me whipping across a 1,000-foot zip line, high above a subtropical rainforest in Mexico's Sierra Madre mountains.

I feel like Tarzan, even if the harness attached to the line belies the fact I don't have the strength of the ape-man. A slight decline and pulleys are propelling me down the line.

This thrilling experience may not be what you expect when you sign on for a relaxing one-week Mexican Riviera cruise on a Princess Cruises ship - in this case the 2,000-passenger Dawn Princess. But who says cruises can't come with adrenaline rushes.

The Outdoor Experience shore excursion ($149 per person) starts in Puerto Vallarta, and also includes a ride in a speedboat across 25-mile-long Banderas Bay to a secluded beach, more bumpedy-bump in a 4x4 open-air truck as you head to the base camp in the Sierra Madres, a ride straight uphill on mules (with a little galloping involved) and, to break up the series of zip lines, walking across wobbly bridges and rappelling 100 feet into an ice-cold waterfall.

It's a thrill, a challenge, a group bonding experience (for the dozen or so participants) and a chance to see gorgeous mountain and seaside scenery all rolled into one six-hour trip. Probably the best shore excursion you'll ever find. Think "Survivor" meets cruising.

Dramatic scenery (and experiences), Mexican culture, history and sunshine are all part of a Mexican Riviera itinerary. These cruises are the perfect alternative to the tried-and-true Caribbean fun-in-the-sun routes.

One-week cruises visit Puerto Vallarta, Mazatlan and Cabo San Lucas, with three days spent at sea.

For those who don't seek thrills in Puerto Vallarta, the one-time fishing village and now popular resort also serves up plenty of beach and shopping options. The place was first put on the map when John Huston filmed "Night of the Iguana" in nearby Mismaloya in the early 1960s. Star Richard Burton brought along married girlfriend Elizabeth Taylor and created a scandal. And then everyone wanted to go there.

Aboard the Dawn Princess.

In Mazatlan, you can also choose the beach, but then you'd be missing a chance to explore the city and get a peak at Mexican culture.

With a population of nearly 325,000, Mazatlan feels like a city more than a tourist Mecca. People really do their shopping at the large indoor market - it is not just a hangout for the tourist crowd - and in the main square near the city's gold-colored cathedral, locals take a break from the hustle and bustle to sit on benches for a chat or have their shoes shined at stands.

Head into the historic district and you'll find colorful buildings dating to the 1800s, including an opera house built for a diva, Angela Peralta. Several galleries offer crafts and artwork at reasonable prices including Gandarva and the Nidart Gallery.

Reserve beach time for Cabo San Lucas, but be aware the beaches there are better for sunning than swimming (due to frequent rough tides).

My companions (my two adult kids) and I headed to "The Office," a beachfront bar on the long strip of Playa El Medano, and a perfect spot for sunning and people-watching. Two-for-one beers and toes in the sand reminded me this was no ordinary workday.

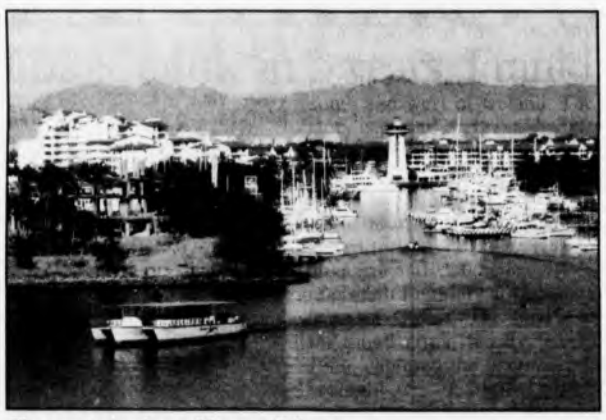
The beach scene is active with vendors selling, well, whatever they could think of to sell - colorful Mexican blankets and rugs, silver jewelry, rental WaveRunners and kayaks, your name created in sand, baskets, cowboy hats with Corona logos. For a quieter beach experience, head to Lover's Beach (accessible by boat).

When you are perfectly pink, head into town for lunch at Mi Casa, where you can enjoy such treats as tacos with shredded pork.

Back at the ship, catch the wonderful views of Los Arcos, the rocks at Land's End that look like they landed here from another planet. You won't find much more dramatic scenery than that.

Cruising on Princess

Princess Cruises offers a cruising experience that is a tad fancier than mainstream lines like Carnival, Royal Caribbean and Norwegian Cruise Line, and also a tad more sedate.



There are daytime activities like making ceramic pottery, vegetable carving demonstrations, Pilates classes, cyber golf (for a fee), shuffleboard tournaments, temporary tattoos, line dance classes and the like (some for an extra fee). But not the plethora of choices on other lines; the overall atmosphere is generally more relaxed.

On the Dawn Princess, people came out for art auctions, first-run movie showings in the theater and trivia contests, but otherwise many seemed content to spend time reading and relaxing in the sun.

At night, there are show productions, comedians, a casino and a piano player who always seemed to draw a crowd.

Guests can choose traditional dining at a set time at an assigned table or Personal Choice Dining, which lets you eat in your assigned dining room whenever you want, and with whomever you want. The only problem is that everyone choosing this option seemed to want to eat at the same time and there were often lines to get into the dining room at dinner. One night my companions and I went to the ship's pizzeria rather than wait - albeit it is a really good pizzeria and we also had several lunches there. An alternative we really enjoyed was the Sterling Steakhouse ($15 per person), the reservations-only nighttime venue serving decent steaks with steakhouse trimmings including creamed spinach.

The ship has a supervised youth center, Internet cafe and a basketball court to further occupy your time at sea. And afternoon tea, complete with warm scones, is a daily highlight.

The scenic harbor of Puerto Vallarta.

IF YOU GO...

Cruising there: Princess has been cruising the Pacific Coast of Mexico for more than 40 years including "The Love Boat" days (1977-1986) when the TV show did some filming onboard the line's vessels. Remember the exuberant "Welcome to Puerto Vallarta" greeting on the show?

Ships depart from California ports from late September to early May. While this season Princess offered cruises from San Diego and Los Angeles, next season (beginning in September), the line will do 7-day cruises from Los Angeles only as well as 10-day Mexico cruises from San Francisco.

Early booking fares for Princess' weeklong Mexican Riviera sailings begin at $599 per person.

Everyone cheerfully sends Sandy (Sally Meehan) off to the New You Enterprises during the rehearsal for the play "A Whole New You." From left, Logan Pratt, Tara Goodwin, Lauren Mack, Mark Seralkas, Ellie Baumgarten, Greta Shwachman, Andrew Bell and Natalie Dignam.

Miss Florem (Ellie Baumgarten) CEO of New You Enterprises makes her presentation to Sandy (Sally Meehan) to become an option girl. CHS has advanced to the semifinals of the Massachusetts High School Drama Festival this weekend.

Next stage

CHS drama in state semi-finals

Miss Fowler (Tara Goodwin) interviews Sandy (Sally Meehan) for entry into the New Day Academy during the rehearsal for "A Whole New Day." This year, 118 high schools from around the state competed in the prestigious festival that is celebrating its 77th year.

Dad (Andrew Bell) speaks with Option One Girl (Logan Pratt) while his daughter (Sally Meehan) looks forlorn in the background. Nine students from Cohasset High School will present their one-act play, "A Whole New You" in the Massachusetts High School Drama Festival semi-final round Saturday.

She shoots, she scores!

LIFE AT CHS

CHRISTINE KENT

Tuesday, the Cohasset Girls scored 44-36 against Manchester in the State Division 4 Title girls' basketball game. This nail-biting event (a gross understatement) teased the audience's nerves as each victorious basket was followed with an equally outstanding throw from the opposing ladies. Winning in overtime, the Cohasset female skippers proved to a crowd of ravenous fans that they are number one!

Not only were Cohasset's basketball talents shown to dominate the court, but their fans also dominated from the bleachers. Overpowering the Manchester green team fans were all the Cohasset supporters with their powerful cheers, chants, and enthusiasm for their players!

In other news, last Thursday the halls of CHS became a Mecca for the delightfully creative and sometimes absurd works of the future and favorite student artists at the "Eat Your Art" show. For anyone who ever wondered if it was possible to make a dress out of fruit rollups or a hat of Peeps, then you shouldn't.... anything is possible! Special congrats to all the winners and artists including seniors, Sam Williams, Abby Foley, Jenna VanEtten, and Amanda Hurd, who snagged an honourable mention for their miniature garden!

Continuing with the topic of food, don't forget to donate non-perishable foods to the Easter Food Drive. Just a reminder, the drop-off box is located in the Main Office. Help bring food to those in need!

Now, for the week's top stories:

• Monday, March 10: Spring sports coaches donned their whistles and carried their clipboards for the spring athletics meeting.

• Tuesday, March 11: A plethora of students where dismissed early to attend the Girls Basketball Eastern Mass Finals at the TD Banknorth Garden.

• Wednesday, March 12: The inductees to the National Honor Society attended the NHS reception and ceremony.

• March 13: The esteemed Drama Club opened their curtains to audiences for the production of the play; "A Whole New You."

• Friday, March 14: The few brave men of CHS strutted their stuff in the always-exciting Mr. Skipper Pageant!

That's it for me this week! Have a great weekend.

Christine Kent is a senior at CHS. Her column appears weekly in the Mariner.

Cohasset business owner takes to national stage

Lisa DiTullio, principal of Lisa DiTullio & Associates, was a key speaker at the Fifth Annual NASA Project Management Challenge on Tuesday, Feb. 26 at the Hilton Oceanfront Hotel, Daytona Beach, Fla.

DiTullio was invited by NASA to be part of this dynamic two-day event which drew more than 1,250 attendees, including many members of the NASA community. Her presentation, "Expected Behaviors: Road Rules for Project Team Members-Not Road Rage" was part of the "Dream Teams" track, dedicated to project team dynamics.

The Daytona Beach event is the fifth time that NASA stakeholders have gathered at the PM Challenge to connect, and explore trends in program and project management. The conference theme, "Reach Higher," was designed to challenge the NASA program and project management community by leveraging the knowledge, ideas and experience of a diverse network of speakers, panelists and participants through the power of knowledge sharing.

DiTullio was one of 65 speakers invited to participate in the two-day event, and her topic was selected from several hundred presentation proposals reviewed by NASA, which came from NASA, private industry, academic and numerous international organizations. Nearly 500 students from Daytona Beach area schools and from Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University and Bethune-Cookman University also attended the event.

"Organizations are more likely to realize results if they establish straightforward behaviors directly related to improving team dynamics."
— Lisa DiTullio

"It was an excellent opportunity to be in front of NASA officials and members of the NASA community to talk about the importance of project management and how it can be of direct and immediate benefit to their organization, as well as others," said DiTullio.

She added, "Organizations are more likely to realize results if they establish straightforward behaviors directly related to improving team dynamics." Her talk suggested that organizations create measurable behaviors so that staff can easily be held accountable. The presentation informed audience members how to create awareness and instill accountability for team behaviors, which result in improved decisions, efficiency, and business results. DiTullio shared practices identified in her book Simple Solutions: How "Enterprise Project Management" Supported Harvard Pilgrim Health Care from Near Collapse to #1.

"ONE OF THE BEST ANIMATED FEATURES OF ALL TIME."

Mandarin Chinese classes come to Cohasset

Mandarin for Kids is now in its fourth week of after school classes held on Mondays at the South Shore Community Center. Cohasset students range in age from 6 to 10 years old and are learning basic communication in Mandarin Chinese as well as Chinese culture, history and geography.

The class was started by Cohasset residents Kate and Chuck Gilliatt, parents of twin 7-year-old girls and a 12-year old boy. The family had become increasingly aware of the dramatic rise of China in the global economy and its relevance to foreign language choices today. Their pursuit started with attempts to find Chinese classes for their children. Frustrated with the lack of options on the South Shore, they happened upon a lucky opportunity. When Kate was on a business trip to Asia last year, she met with long time associate and friend, Carol Lewis in Hong Kong. Carol was soon to be returning to the United States and Kate asked her if she was willing to tutor her children. The Gilliatts, sensing a local demand for Chinese language education, developed the idea into two after school classes and the Mandarin for Kids program was born. The program has been so successful that four classes will be offered in a Spring session starting April 14.

Carol Lewis was uniquely qualified to teach the program, bringing not only her language skills but also her first-hand experiences fresh from China. The kids are treated to anecdotes from her travels around the country meeting Chinese people of all socio-economic backgrounds. She lived and worked in China for four years as an English Teacher at a Chinese university in Zhuhai, Guangdong Province. In advance of her trip she studied Mandarin at Harvard University and continued studying in China. Mandarin is the country's official language spoken by the vast majority of the Chinese people. Carol's method for teaching Mandarin is to concentrate on phrases and words that are most useful. The class focuses on building language skills through role playing and practicing dialogue on which to build conversation skills.

Another unique aspect of the course is the Mandarin for Kids Pen Pal Project. Each student in the class has a Chinese pen pal his or her own age in China. The American and Chinese students share pictures and interesting details about their lives. This has grown into a fascinating cultural exchange that has greatly enriched the classroom experience. One of Carol's friends, Apple, an elementary teacher in Beijing, is coordinating the Chinese side of the project. Several of the Chinese participants have expressed a desire to come to America. In fact, the current students here are so excited about their new international relationships that they have all asked Carol if she will take them to China one day to meet their new friends!

Anyone interested in the program can contact Chuck Gilliatt at 781-383-2901 or email him at cgilliatt@comcast.net.

Braintree Forum, Cohasset Mariner, Duxbury Reporter, Hanover Mariner, Hingham Journal, Kingston Mariner, Marshfield Mariner, Norwell Mariner, Old Colony Memorial, Pembroke Mariner & Reporter, Plymouth Bulletin, Scituate Mariner, Wareham Courier, Weymouth News

We know there are many bright, talented and caring young adults in our communities, and this year, a special section entitled "The Best & The Brightest" will appear in the COHASSET MARINER to celebrate their accomplishments.

Please help us find these remarkable teens and young adults by filling out the nomination form on this page. You can nominate an individual between the ages of 16 and 21 who, you believe, deserves to be honored, whether it be for academic achievement, volunteerism, athletics, artistic acumen or the pursuit of excellence in another field. Here's your opportunity to get involved.

You can bring the form to the Community Newspaper Company office at 182 Standish Ave., Plymouth, MA 02360 or mail the form to Beth Doyle, or fax the form to 508-591-6601.

All entries will be considered by a selection panel, and successful nominees will be interviewed and photographed. During the week of May 26th, Community Newspaper Company will include "The Best & The Brightest," a special section devoted to sharing as many of the stories and photographs of those nominated as possible.

Easter display inspired by childhood memories

A little Easter history . . . and some fun facts

The Christian celebration of Easter dates as far back as the second century.

Throughout history, this holiday has been associated with many traditions and symbols.

For example, decorated Easter eggs were first observed and recorded in the 13thcentury. Rabbits were first associated with Easter in 17th-century Europe, and by the 19th century it was a common tradition to "believe" that rabbits produced and decorated the Easter eggs. Depending on the country, however, the Easter Bunny wasn't always the one who delivered the eggs. For instance, in Switzerland the cuckoo was believed to do so.

According to the National Confectioners Association:

- The first chocolate eggs were made in Europe in the early 19th century and remain among the most popular treats associated with Easter.
- 90 million chocolate Easter bunnies and 16 billion jelly beans are produced for Easter each year.
- During peak production days leading up to the holiday, as many as five million marshmallow chicks and bunnies are produced daily.
- Easter is the second top-selling confectionery holiday behind. Halloween is the first.
- 88 percent of adults carry on the Easter tradition of creating Easter baskets for their children.
- 76 percent of chocolate bunny lovers eat the ears first.
- Red jelly beans are kids' favorite.

Faberge Eggs — Some of the most famous decorated Easter eggs were made by the jewelry and decorative object designer and manufacturer Peter Carl Fabergé. After inheriting the family jewelry business in St. Petersburg in 1870, his uniquely beautiful designs became popular among Russian and European royalty. In 1884, Emperor Alexander III commissioned the first eggs for his wife.

World's largest Easter Egg — According to the Guinness World Records, the world's largest Easter egg was created by Belgian chocolate maker Guylian. The edible 4,299-pound chocolate egg sculpture, made in celebration of the renovation of Belgium's largest market square in Sint-Niklaas, the company's home town, was produced in 2005.

Emily Mondon of the Hingham Gift Company, 61 Water St., in Hingham shows off an Easter basket that is sure to surprise and delight a child.

According to Guylian, the 27-foot, 3-inch tall, 21-foot wide egg, took 26 master chocolate makers eight days and 50,000 chocolate bars to construct. Metal scaffolding was used to support the shell during construction. All the chocolate used to create the egg was produced at Guylian's factory and headquarters in Sint-Niklaas.

Largest Easter Egg Hunt — The largest Easter egg hunt, according to Guinness, featured 510,000 brightly colored, candy-filled Easter eggs hidden among the landscaping of the Cypress Gardens theme park near Winter Haven, Fla. More than 9,700 people, including many children, participated in this historic event. All the eggs were gathered in less than an hour.

About 1,000 of the eggs held special prizes donated by local businesses, including the grand prize egg containing a two-year scholarship to Polk Community College. The egg was discovered by a six-year old, who attended a special ceremony with his family at the park's Magnolia Mansion where he was presented with the official scholarship certificate.

White House event — The White House Easter Egg Roll has long been a Washington tradition. Historians differ as to its origin. Some think that Dolly Madison came up with the idea, while others believe that the tradition dates back to President Lincoln.

Eggs reportedly rolled on the White House lawn as early as 1872, but it hasn't always been a smooth affair. Apparently, in 1876, the children were so boisterous that Congress tried to block such events in the future. There are at least two versions of what happened next, but the White House Egg Roll resumed in 1878.

Over the years, the Egg Roll has changed with the times. In the late 19th century, children played games called "Egg Picking," "Egg Ball," "Toss and Catch," and "Egg Croquet." Eventually, the Easter Egg Roll became more structured and elaborate. In 1889, John Philip Sousa and "The President's Own" Marine Band performed. Folk and maypole dancing were introduced during President Herbert Hoover's term.

In 1933, Eleanor Roosevelt took the Easter Egg Roll nationwide via radio, greeting visitors and listeners on air. She also introduced more games, but it was not until 1974 that the famous egg-rolling race using White House kitchen spoons became part of the festivities.

Since that time, the hunt has featured a circus, petting zoo, antique cars, Broadway shows, giant balloons, egg hunt pits (for autographed wooden eggs), and other grand festivities.

Presidents and their families enjoy attending, and the Easter Bunny, introduced by Patricia Nixon (wife of President Richard Nixon) in 1969 — usually a White House staffer dressed in a bunny suit — always makes an appearance.

Occasionally, the White House Easter Egg Roll is canceled or relocated due to inclement weather or during war times. This year's annual White House Easter Egg Roll is scheduled for March 24 on the South Lawn of the White House. (Source: www.whitehouse.gov)

'Build your own' Easter baskets

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The Easter Bunny has already paid a visit to the Hingham Gift Company, leaving behind an eye-catching and sumptuous "Easter Basket Buffet" for kids of all ages.

Upon entering, customers' eyes are immediately drawn to the center of the shop, where a splendid array of premium Easter candy — large and small chocolate and marshmallow-filled bunnies, cream- and marshmallow-filled eggs, jelly beans, giant rocky road eggs, all-natural bunny cookies and lollipops, and more — is laid out.

There are also delightful plush bunnies dressed in knitted sweaters and cute mini plush chicks, monkeys, frogs, and puppies, along with specialty kids' gifts ranging from spring bath gifts to toys and sports items. Small fun basket stuffers — inexpensive gadgets such as cute pencils, pens, coloring books, and bubbles — make nice Easter basket additions.

The shop is located at 61 Water St. beside Bare Cove Gourmet Caterer on the harbor end in Hingham not far from the Fruit Center. The Hingham Gift Company offers a flexible mix of regular retail gift store concepts and 'build your own gift baskets" for any occasion year-round – all with a personal touch.

The shop features more than 300 "unique, luxurious, and practical" items, which when combined with some of the Easter offerings, make nice Easter baskets for fun-loving adults.

This sumptuous display was inspired by one of shop owner Emily Mondon's fondest childhood memories of an Easter morning at her grandparents' house in Greensboro, N.C.

"I awoke to find a really unique basket that had been created just for me," she said.

Nestled inside was a beautiful plush rabbit surrounded by old-fashioned candy-filled papier-mache eggs and other items her family thought she would enjoy.

They were right, and now Mondon is providing customers with flexible options to create their own unique, customized Easter baskets – and memories.

"Customers can grab stuffers for baskets that are already underway, build their own one-of-a-kind basket in the store, or choose a ready-made basket," she said. There's also the flexibility to design baskets for different budgets. Items from other stores may be added for a small handling charge.

Mondon decided to open the shop in Hingham last summer because living just over the Hingham/Hull town line, she does much of her personal shopping in downtown Hingham and is therefore familiar with the area.

Store hours are Mon. through Fri., 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sat., 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. For further information, visit www.hinghamgiftcompany.com or call 1-888-GIFTS-01.

Bible Study series continues on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Practical Christianity. Some Christians commonly view the Old Testament as a storybook-full of fascinating tales, yet ancient and irrelevant to modern reality. This exceptional 10-week study from Insight For Living with Chuck Swindoll will help you blow the dust off these timeworn chronicles and discover enduring truths that relate directly to you, while translating into reliable patterns for godly living. Experience familiar passages as never before, and find fresh inspiration in the memorable scenes revisited. Follow the examples of faithful Old Testament heroes such as Abraham, Joseph, David, and many others as you learn to apply timeless biblical principles to your everyday life. Please join us.

Our mission statement is: "Equipping God's people for living out the Good News to be the hands, feet, voice and heart of Christ in our community and in the world." How should we accomplish this? Come hear sermons to find out.

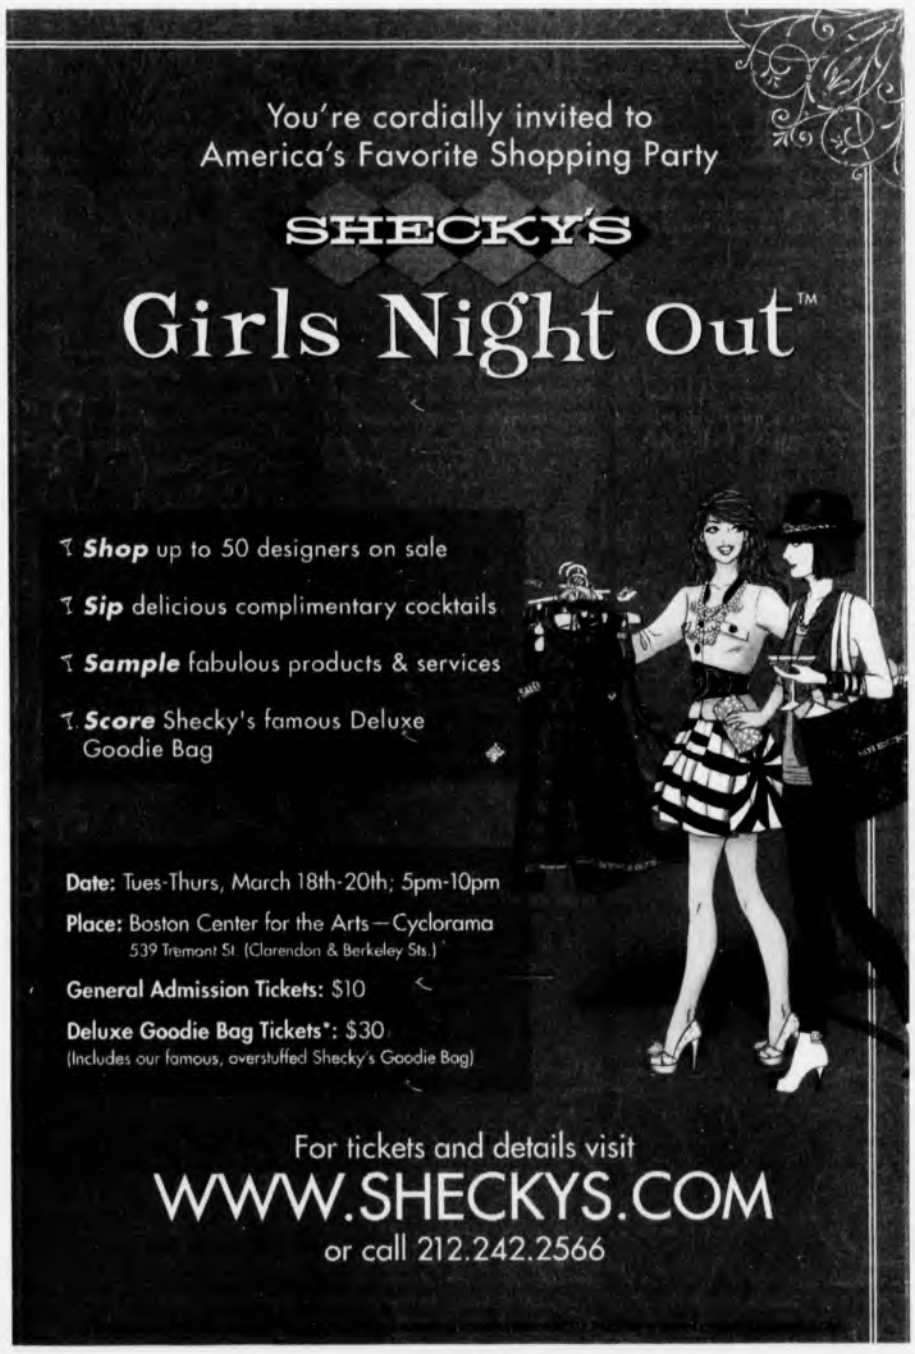
Sister Helen Prejean speaks at Abbey

Glastonbury Abbey's Inter-religious lecture series Listening To Other Voices: Prophets of Compassion: Who Cares continues. The March 27 lecture "Dead Man Walking: The Journey Continues" features Sister Helen Prejean, CSJ

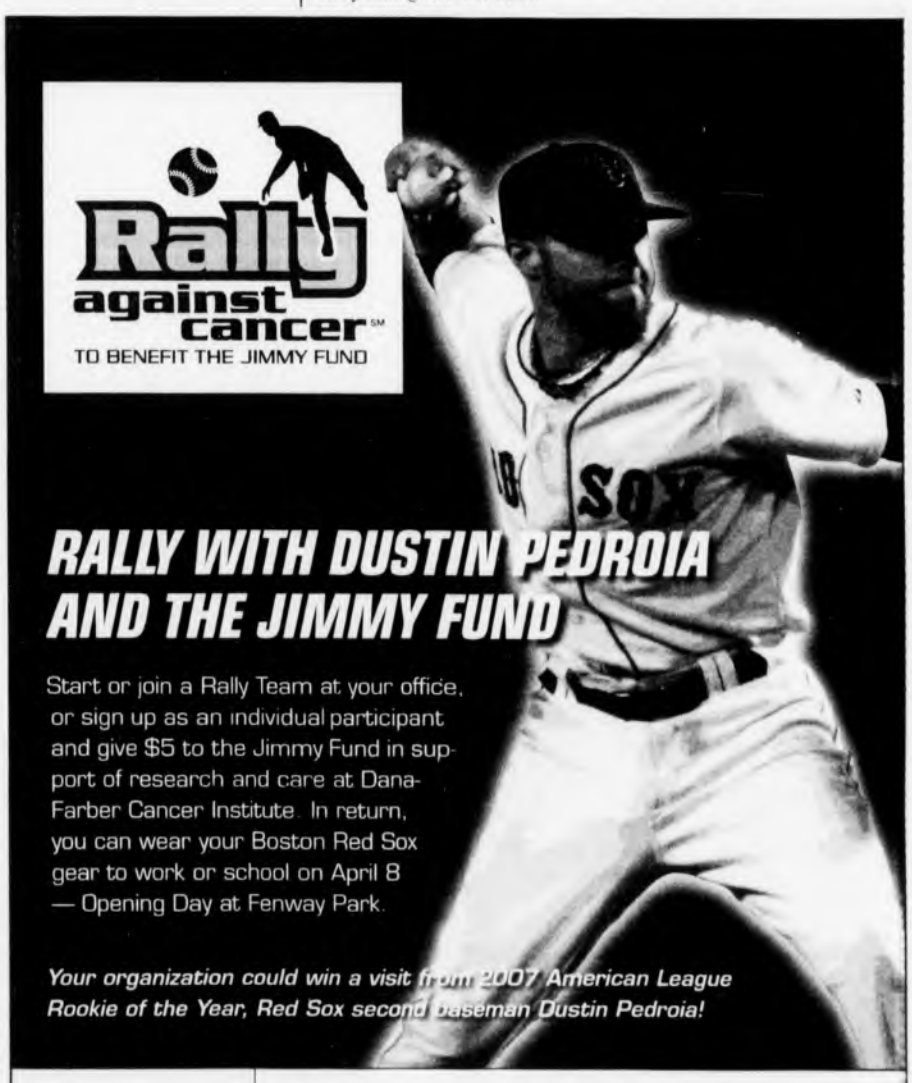
Could you walk someone to their death? Sister Helen Prejean has done it a number of times. You saw the walk if you saw the movie "Dead Man Walking," based on her first book. Her second book, "The Death of Innocents: An Eyewitness Accounts of Wrongful Executions." speaks of her witness of the executions of two men whom she believes were innocent and the broken justice system in this country.

In her talk, she will walk you with her and the "dead man" down the Last Mile and challenge you with the question: "If life is God's greatest gift to us, are we free to take it away?" She also will talk about the death and devastation Hurricane Katrina wrought in her native Louisiana.

All lectures are free and begin at 7:15 p.m. in the Glastonbury Conference Center, 16 Hull St., Hingham. Donations gratefully accepted. Reservations recommended by calling 781-749-2155.



Annual Good Friday Walk is March 21



For those wishing to make Easter and the arrival of spring really special this year, Kay Doherty of Sharing Inc., invites people of all ages and all faiths to join her in the Good Friday Walk on March 21, this year. Although there are a now a number of other Good Friday Walks throughout New England, hundreds of people return to join Doherty on the walk in Hingham. The Hingham walk alone has raised more than $2,800,000. The miles walkers have completed range from 100 to 600. Many others have returned year after year to participate on Good Friday by administering refreshments or first aid to the walkers along the route. For them, helping in some way has become a Good Friday tradition.

It was in 1972, while living in Abington, that Doherty began to exercise her faith by walking on Good Friday. Little did she know that this walk would blossom into Sharing Inc., a nonprofit organization that administers the Walk, and that thousands of people over time would join this unusual kind of "exercise club." These spirit-filled people continue to demonstrate their faith, earning funds by working or walking on Good Friday and making a difference in the lives of the underprivileged, especially in the lives of the children in the rural areas of Mississippi and West Alabama. As of December 2007, the combined total of the money given away by all the Good Friday Walks has exceeded $7,500,000.

Walkers may begin anytime from 7 to 9 a.m. from Plymouth River School, 200 High St. The route winds for 20 miles from the school, through parts of Hingham and for several miles in Wompatuck State Park. Most walkers complete the 20-mile hike, but walkers are not required to walk all 20 miles.

Anyone wishing to participate in this year's walk may obtain sponsor sheets by contacting Doherty at Sharing Inc., P.O. Box 850153, Braintree, MA 02185-0153 or call 781-843-1676. Local residents may contact Donna Austin for walk sponsor sheets by calling her at 781-749-8778. All walkers are requested to obtain a minimum of $20 in pledges on their sponsor sheets.

Plimoth Cinema expands

Announcing coming attractions shown daily

Want to see great films all week long? Plimoth Cinema is proud to become the South Shore's first, daily venue for the latest foreign and independent films, including some 2008 Oscar nominees and winners! Beginning, March 21, Plimoth Cinema will be expanding its program schedule by offering daily showings, in addition to the cinema's popular, regular weekend schedule.

"When Plimoth Cinema began last fall, we knew there was a demand for a venue showing independent and foreign films on the South Shore," said Kathleen Curtin, Plimoth Cinema Committee Member. "But we soon found our movie-goers wanted more opportunities to catch the great films we bring to the area, and we listened. In addition to providing more screenings, this new daily expansion will allow Plimoth Cinema to work with a broad range of distributors to provide a wider variety of alternative films to the theatergoers. We continue to be thrilled by the local enthusiasm."

Currently, Plimoth Cinema operates weekends with two Saturday screenings at 4:30 and 7 p.m., and a matinee screening, Sunday afternoons at 2 p.m. Now, moviegoers can catch our weekly film Monday through Friday at 4 p.m. The new expansion begins showing on March 21. Every Friday a new film will come to Plimoth Cinema and play throughout the week.

Saturday nights are considered "Date Night" at Plimoth Cinema, serving beer and wine along with a wide variety of unique concession items. In addition to popcorn, hotdogs and traditional movie candy, the Plimoth Cinema Concession Stand makes it a habit of offering homemade specialty items as well.

Saturday nights are considered "Date Night" at Plimoth Cinema, serving beer and wine along with a wide variety of unique concession items. In addition to popcorn, hotdogs and traditional movie candy, the Plimoth Cinema Concession Stand makes it a habit of offering homemade specialty items as well.

The Plimoth Cinema Club Card is just the thing for frequent filmgoers. For just $10, frequent moviegoers can purchase a Plimoth Cinema Club Card, which entitles them to a $1.50 discount off the purchase of Plimoth Cinema movie tickets each week. In addition, the Cinema has introduced the $20 Cinema Gift Certificate, which is good for two movies and all the popcorn you can eat. It's a great gift and a good bargain too! Interested parties should call 508-746-1622, ext. 8222.

Plimoth Cinema's big screen is located in the Linn Theater, located inside Plimoth Plantation's Harry Hornblower Visitor Center. The theater comfortably seats 225 guests and features 7.1 full-surround-sound, making it perfect for viewing such specialty films.

Plimoth Cinema has already scheduled some great films for the month ahead. Of course, they are some of the best, current independent and foreign films available. They include:

Starting Out In The Evening: March15 and 16

Diving Bell & The Butterfly: March 21-27

4 Months, 3 Weeks, 2 Days: March 28-April 3

Caramel: April 4 -April 10

Persepolis: April 11 - April 17

Tickets are $6.50 for Seniors and Plimoth Plantation members and $8.50 for adults. Those interested in receiving updates and schedules should register for the Plimoth Cinema Newsletter at www.plimoth.org.

Note: All Plimoth Cinema schedules are tentative, so film titles, and/ or corresponding dates are subject to change. For the most up to date schedule, consult www.plimoth.org.

Plimoth Cinema is a public program offered by Plimoth Plantation, a 17th century living history museum located an hour south of Boston in Plymouth, (Exit 4, Route 3 South) and 20 minutes north of Cape Cod. The museum is a private, non-profit educational institution supported by admission fees, contributions, memberships, function sales and revenue from our varied dining programs/services and museum shops. Plimoth Plantation is a Smithsonian Institution Affiliate and receives support from the Massachusetts Cultural Council, The Federal Institute of Museums and Library Services, The National Endowment for the Humanities, private foundations, corporations, and local businesses. Deer Hill fourth-grade teacher Mike Lewis, who is sporting his new haircut, reads, "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone" to his class. He told his students that he would shave his head if they read more than any other class.

Promise of shaved head motivates students

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"The amount and rigor in which they read is just amazing, it is definitely a suggestion I don't regret."
— Mike Lewis, teacher

Cohasset teachers go to great lengths to get their kids to read. Case in point, fourth grade teacher Mike Lewis told his class at the start of this year's PSO Readathon fundraiser if his class read more than any other class, he would shave his head.

More than 30,000 minutes of reading later, Mr. Lewis has very little hair.

"This is a very special class. The amount and rigor in which they read is just amazing, it is definitely a suggestion I don't regret," says Lewis.

Lewis said his students from the very start of the school year have been great readers. During the day they would recommend books to each other or animatedly discuss a chapter in a particular book. He saw his students already were reading primarily for enjoyment, why not challenge them a little bit? That was when he made the passing suggestion of shaving his head.

"I didn't necessarily expect them to run away with it," says Lewis. The kids surprised him and, as promised, he shaved off his locks at the end of the three-week readathon.

To achieve their goal the fourth graders were inventive in their ways to squeeze in as much reading time as possible. Some spent their February vacation lost in a world come alive with words. Many gave up television time in order to read, although one girl admitted she still made time to watch "American Idol." Others would stay

Smoking bylaw opposed

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

As far as the Selectmen are concerned a proposed bylaw can go up in smoke. A Board of Health-sponsored smoking bylaw amendment to mandate smoke-free environments in private clubs was not backed by any of the Selectmen Monday night.

The proposed bylaw would formally regulate private clubs and membership associations essentially making them smoke-free. The George H. Mealy American Legion Post is the only one in town that has not voluntarily banned smoking on its premises. Other private clubs and facilities include the Cohasset yacht and sailing clubs, Bancroft Hall, and all church organizations.

The Board of Health presented the bylaw to the Board of Selectmen in early February, but the Selectmen requested to hear from members of the American Legion, both for and against the bylaw, to fully understand the issue.

Several Legion members were present who opposed the bylaw. Larry Sousa, second vice commander of the Legion post, reported Legion members recently voted in a ratio of two to one in opposition of the smoking bylaw amendment.

"Many of them thought they have given enough to government to be allowed to have a cigarette," said Sousa. He explained the Legion is equipped with a filter system and two smoke eaters.

The Legion Post is located at 98 Summer St. across from the Veterans Memorial Park at the harbor. While operated by the American Legion, the town owns the building itself. The town leases the building to the Legion for $1 per year and has done so since just after

Teaming up for a cause

T-shirts provide 'Emotional Armor'

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It was purely by chance — or perhaps destiny — that Jenifer Hoffman and Bill Burnett crossed paths. Hoffman was just a name on the Cohasset Triathlon waiting list and Burnett, the founder and race director. But, when Burnett called Hoffman to tell her she made it off the waiting list, there was an immediate connection between them and a collaboration was born.

Hoffman and Burnett both share in a common mission: to do things they are passionate about and, in the process, raise money for causes they feel similarly passionate about.

Hoffman founded and owns Emotional Armor, a company that creates products meant to inspire and motivate. The Cohasset Triathlon, Burnett says, does the same thing with an event. Once common ground was established, it didn't take long for the two energetic people to decide to work together.

The two melded their ideas into concrete action — a collection of limited edition t-shirts emblazoned with triathlon specific and inspirational messages (see sidebar). All the proceeds from the sale of the t-shirts will be donated to charity.

The t-shirts are an extension of what each does as an individual. Emotional Armor donates all its profits to two causes Hoffman believes in. Burnett donates its net proceeds to the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation. The funds raised from the triathlon t-shirts will be donated to charities both Hoffman and Burnett feel affirm what they do.

"I love that there is no agenda for either of us. We're just trying to do something good and to be a part of something bigger than ourselves," says Hoffman.

When Burnett called Hoffman to tell her she was off the waiting list for the triathlon, they talked about their separate fundraising efforts.

"I was blown away by Jen's energy and positive outlook in life. We have very similar interests in giving back to our community and specific

Springing into shape

Road race is right around the corner

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Spring is nearly here.

As a true harbinger of spring, things are gearing up for the 32nd running of the Cohasset Road Race by the Sea set for Sunday, April 6.

Put on annually by the Cohasset Rotary Club, the Road Race is a venerable part of the town's calendar of events. The 10-kilometer race brings runners and their families from all over Massachusetts, New England and the country.

More than a road race, Race Director Brad Goodwin considers the Road Race By the Sea a community event, one that brings Cohasset out of winter hibernation to enjoy the outdoors and warmer weather.

"The Road Race is an opportunity to bring a lot of people to town for a fun event and for the Rotary Club to advance our projects," says Goodwin, who is in the process of organizing his fifth road race by the sea.

"The last few years I've heard from so many runners who appreciate how everyone in town seems to be out cheering on the course," says Goodwin. Families create water stops along the route; in addition to official race water stop each mile. Others set up lawn chairs to watch and cheer as the runners pass by. Groups like the Appalachia Service Project and Boy Scouts pitch in to help with road crossings and water stops.

"It just brings everyone together," says Goodwin. They could always use more volunteers from the community to help get the race off without a hitch. "Ninety-nine percent of the volunteers have so much fun, they can't wait to come again," he says.

The race is both certified and sanctioned as a 10K road race by the USA Track and Field, the national governing body of road races and other track

Projects get thumbs up

After a brief explanation and a short question-and-answer session, the Board of Selectmen unanimously supported the 11 Community Preservation projects going before Town Meeting. Community Preservation Committee Chairman Stuart Ivimey gave the run down on the myriad projects coming from a cross section of town organizations. The CPC is recommending spending nearly $800,000.

The proposed projects include: Town Hall restoration project (exterior work, $300,000); the installation of six raingardens in the James Brook watershed ($88,500); the Housing Partnership's request for perc tests on town-owned property off Smith Place and Pleasant Lane ($20,000); restoration and preservation work at the Historical Society ($51,700); purchase of land in the Brass Kettle watershed ($175,000); restoration of town archives ($50,000); construction of the culvert under Border St., between the Gulf River and harbor ($35,000); installation of a fire sprinkler system at the American Legion George H. Mealy Post 118 ($20,000); a Cohasset harbor zoning study ($20,000); and debt service for a open space acquisition ($38,479).

The Board of Selectmen unanimously supported all the CPC sub-articles. Town Meeting voters will have the final say on how CPC money is spent.

Transfer Station closed Easter Sunday

The Recycling Transfer Center will be closed on Easter Sunday, March 23, and will re-open on Wednesday, March 26.

Selectmen sign bonds

The Board of Selectmen voted Monday night to approve $2,515,000 in bond anticipation notes for water system improvements authorized under a 2004 Annual Town Meeting article. Commerce Capital Markets, Inc. submitted the low bid at a net interest cost of 2.011 percent.

For this issuance, Town Manager Bill Griffin reported Standard & Poor's affirmed the town's AA+ credit rating. Of note, he said, was Standard & Poor's revision of the town's long-term general obligation debt from "negative" to "stable." The report indicated the revision was due to the town's rebuilding of its reserves to a sound level in fiscal 2006 and 2007.

Casino Gambling Forum

A public forum on the question of casino gambling in Massachusetts presented by the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee's "Cohasset Political Forum" from 7 to 9:30 p.m. Wednesday, March 26, at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 35 Ripley Road.

Three brief presentations by public figures and or authors on the subject will be presented followed by dialogue, questions and answers and invited public discussion. The three formal participants are:

• Ted Carr - Cohasset Selectman and Executive with the Patrick Administration – with oversight authority over casino gambling.

• Professor Robert Goodman - author of the book "The Luck Business."

• Louise Haldeman - Casino gambling issue specialist from the Massachusetts League Of Woman Voters

Overview and participant introductions by Kevin McCarthy, chair of the Cohasset Democratic Committee. The forum will be moderated by Tom Callahan, vice-chair of the Cohasset Democratic Committee and former Cohasset Town Selectman. The overriding purpose of the forum is to educate the public regarding casino gambling and to invite public discussion on this important public issue.

Free and open to the public.

POLICE BEAT

Spate of car crashes along Route 3A in Cohasset

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

• At about 5:50 a.m. Monday (March 10) a Ryder rental truck being operated by a resident of New York was exiting a driveway on the west side of Route 3A near the Scituate line when it was hit by a Jeep, driven by a Scituate woman, that was headed north. The officer was unable to determine who was at fault – whether the Jeep was traveling too fast or the rental truck pulled out without yielding to the Jeep. Neither driver was cited. There were no apparent injuries and the Jeep was towed.

• At just past 9:30 a.m. on Monday (March 10) a 1990 Mack Truck was coming out of Crocker Lane to turn left (north) onto 3A when a 2007 Toyota, driven by a Scituate resident, failed to allow enough time for the truck to complete the turn. Police said the Toyota was making a left into Crocker lane when the collision occurred. The truck hit the rear driver's side door of the Toyota and also damaged the bumper. The driver of the Toyota, which had to be towed, was cited for failure to use care when turning. There were no apparent injuries.

• A 2006 Nissan operated by a Pembroke resident tried to turn left out of Sohier Street onto 3A and pulled into the path of a 2000 Buick driven by a Cohasset resident last Thursday (March 13) at about 9:10 a.m. Based on witness testimony, the Pembroke resident was cited for failure to use care when turning. Paramedics treated no one. The Nissan had to be towed, police said.

• A 2007 Chevrolet, operated by a Cohasset resident, pulled out of Shaw's Plaza and cut into the lane of travel of a 2004 Saturn that was headed south toward Scituate at 5p.m. on Saturday (March 15). The front end of the Saturn that was being driven by a Hull resident, struck the driver's front side of the Chevy. The Cohasset resident was cited for failure to yield the right of way while making a turn. Both cars were towed and there were no apparent injuries, police said.

• A 2005 Toyota, operated by a Cohasset resident, had stopped at the light on 3A at Pond Street in order to take a left onto Pond when it was "rear-ended" by a 2003 Jeep driven by a Scituate resident at about 4:30 p.m. on Sunday (March 16). The Scituate resident was cited for following too closely. There were no apparent injuries and only minor damage to both vehicles, police said.

Headstone

A headstone that was found in the woods last week was not there due to vandalism. Apparently the family of the deceased had replaced the headstone and the DPW was waiting to see what the family wanted done with the old one, police said.

Neighborhood dispute

A dispute over a town easement and whose property belongs to whom ended up in the police log last week.

An Atlantic Avenue resident called and claimed that two people were trespassing. The caller knew the individuals who also lived in the area. Police talked with all parties, listened to all versions, and explained that while it was a civil matter, everyone should be careful to honor boundaries and stay within the town easement and off the caller's property.

Car in woods

In a bizarre series of calls, it was reported that a Toyota 4Runner, leaning against a couple of saplings and with two wheels off the ground was perched vicariously on a cliff and was about to tip over.

Based on witness testimony, the Pembroke resident was cited for failure to use care when turning.

Police said a hiker/runner saw the car that was in the woods off Bow Street on private property. Police contacted the registered owner who explained the last person to use the motor vehicle was one of his children. The owner made assurances that he would make arrangements to move the vehicle as soon as possible.

Police are unclear about how long the Toyota was at that location – a few hours or overnight.

The incident was reported last Wednesday (March 12).

Yellow Pages

Two calls reported a suspicious a maroon van, first on Beechwood Street and then on N. Main Street, last week. As it turned out, the van was a subcontractor for the telephone company that distributes the Yellow Pages and was making deliveries to homes in Cohasset.

Lost wallet

A local man reported he lost his wallet, which had more than $100 in cash, personal papers and credit cards last week. Police appreciate hearing when someone has lost a purse or wallet. If a purse, wallet or pocketbook is found and turned in, police will "hunt down" the owner and return it, Chief Hussey said.

Generator

A gas-powered generator was stolen from a shed at the kennels off Cedar Street last week. Detectives went to the scene to collect evidence. The owner believes the generator was taken sometime from March 10-12.

If anyone saw anything suspicious, they should contact the police detectives at 781-383-1055.

Arrest

A 41-year-old W. Bridgewater man was charged with operating on a suspended license last Friday (March 14) after a cell phone caller reported to the dispatcher the dump truck the man was driving forced him off the road and then tailgated him.

An officer conducting traffic enforcement on Route 3A near Beechwood Street saw the truck that the dispatcher described and stopped it the southbound lane near the Scituate line.

The caller, who was driving a white car, also pulled over and talked to the officer. The caller said the truck forced him off the road on Route 228 in Hull and then followed him onto Route 3A into Cohasset.

A computer check revealed the operator of the truck had a suspended license and he was placed under arrest.

Police notified Hull about the incident to see if Hull police want to take further action, police said.

Beer cans

A Summer Street resident has let police know about an ongoing problem of beer cans being left all over the resident's lawn. It appears that there is a site is close-by where teens are drinking alcohol and police will be checking the area, Chief Hussey said.

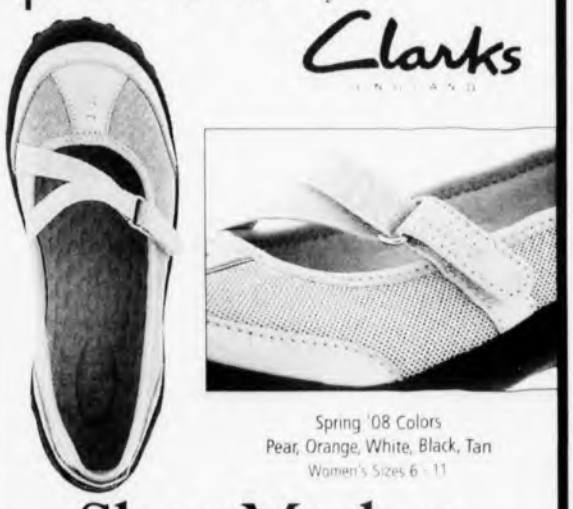
Car break-in

A car that the owner believes was left unlocked while he was out of town was broken into last week. Taken were some CDs and a bunch of quarters. There was also damage to the front passenger side door although police believe that damage was not related to the actual entering of the car. The damage may have been caused by another car door, police said. The incident, which occurred near the 150 block of N. Main Street was reported Sunday morning (March 16).

Bikes found

Police picked up two abandoned bikes last week and have them at the station. One of the bikes is a child's red, 2Badd model valued at about $50. It was found near the Cohasset Golf Club. The other is a blue Trek that was somewhat in the bushes on Ripley Road near the post office.

Deer carcasses



Anyone who would like to pick up a deer after it has been killed by a car should contact Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy at 781-383-1055 (extension 1014) to be put on a list. Some people are would like the venison, Murphy said.

Bylaw could go up in smoke

FROM SMOKING, PAGE 1

World War I, said Town Manager Bill Griffin.

Board of Health Chairman Peggy Chapman said the bylaw is intended to finish up the smoke-free bylaws of the town and ensure compliance with the state's smoke-free workplace law.

The Massachusetts Smoke-Free Workplace Law is primarily intended to protect workers from health hazards resulting from exposure to secondhand smoke. Under the state's smoke-free workplace law, memberships/private clubs are exempt when the building is not open to the public or when non-members are not invited guests. This bylaw would not allow smoking under any circumstances.

"I find it hard to deny a veteran the right to smoke."
— Selectman Ralph Dormitzer

Cohasset established a smoking bylaw banning all smoking in restaurants and bars in 1998. The bylaw was then amended in 2003 to include all workplaces.

Legion member Rocky Laugelle said smoking was allowed downstairs, but upstairs, where functions are typically held, remains smoke-free.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said he had a difficult time coming to a determination on the issue.

"I find it hard to deny a veteran the right to smoke," said Dormitzer, although he knew all were aware of the health hazards associated with smoking. He couldn't come up with a solution to satisfy both the Board of Health and the Legion.

To get a feel for the Legion's operation Dormitzer paid a visit last Saturday to see for himself the operation and to talk with Legion members. "The Legion members I talked to wanted to have the right to smoke."

But, he did find the ventilation downstairs was not adequate and suggested the Legion address that issue.

Selectman Fred Koed echoed Dormitzer's sentiments of the difficult nature of the issue and said he struggled with his opinion. He said he quit smoking 25 years ago, but knew of the camaraderie associated with smoking, particularly with servicemen.

"This is the one place in town where these guys who made sacrifices and put their life on the line to sit down, smoke and socialize," said Koed.

The Board of Selectmen voted unanimously to recommend disapproval of the bylaw. The Advisory Committee has recommended disapproval of the bylaw in a 5-3 vote.

up late, pushing their bedtime to 10:30p.m. to get in extra reading minutes. One student found waking up a little early (say, around 4:30a.m.) enabled her to get in at least a couple hours of reading time before getting ready for school.

Each day, Lewis says, the student collected and compiled the classes reading minutes. As a group, they tallied the total minutes, sometimes putting forth their own goals and reading quotas.

"They were excited about it. They pushed each other," says Lewis. His class competed with all the other classes at Deer Hill. "The competition was always friendly, but my students took it seriously."

In the end, the class raised more than $900 for the PSO. The PSO, or Parent Schools Organization, is a parent volunteer driven group devoted to providing support to Cohasset schools through fundraising, organizing and donating time. The money raised goes back into the classroom, funding special events, innovative teaching tools and learning programs.

Many of the students in the class are big fans of the Harry Potter series. The interest in the books started with just a few students, but spread like wildfire throughout the class.

When his students began getting interested in the Harry Potter series, he had only read the first couple of books. But, after noticing his students increasing interest in JK Rowling's magical world, he picked up the books again.

"The kids inspired me to read," says Lewis with a smile. Now, he's reading out loud to the class from the first Harry Potter book, "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone."

The PSO offered the class who had read the most a pizza party as a reward for their efforts. But, Mr. Lewis's class proposed to do something very different with the money.

"The class recognized that everybody in the school participated in the Readathon, not just them. Instead of a pizza party, they asked for the money be donated to purchase books for the school library," says Lewis. "Their reward was the enjoyment of reading."

'Healing Field' is planned for Memorial Day

The Sons of the American Legion is planning to install a Healing Field as part of the town's Memorial Day 2008 observances.

The effort should result in hundreds of American flags on eight-foot-tall poles temporarily installed on the town-owned island at the corner of Border and Summer streets. The island faces Veterans Memorial Park where the annual Memorial Day observances are held.

The flags sell for $25 and can be dedicated to anyone. In other words, the purchase of a flag is not limited to those honoring someone who is serving or has served in the Armed Forces. (Those who purchase flags will be able to pick them up after 10 days).

Checks should be made out to the Sons of the American Legion, with a note on the memo line indicating "Healing Field" and sent to Sons of the American Legion, PO Box 118, Cohasset, MA 02025. For more information, please visit www.healingfield.org/cohasset or contact the Legion post at 781-383-9657 or stop by the post at 98 Summer St. any weekday after 3 p.m., Saturdays after 10 a.m. or Sundays after 12 noon. Applications for Healing Field flags are available at the Post and at both branches of Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. All proceeds will go to veterans' projects of the Sons of the American Legion.

Caring for the caregiver

Social Service League and Elder Affairs join forces

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"...it's important for people to know you're not the first person to go through it — and you're not the only one."
— Jane Reardon, Social Service League

It could happen at any time. An elder in your life — your mother, father, aunt, uncle — could be in need of significant care. Where to start? Where to find the best resources for them? How to handle medical expenses?

Overnight things could change and the care for an elder could become your responsibility. It's a difficult time for all involved, but there are resources out there and ways to prepare.

To highlight many common issues and concerns in the caring of an elder, the Social Service League of Cohasset and the Cohasset Elder Affairs have teamed up to put on a series of seminars at the Cohasset Paul Pratt Memorial Library, "Guiding the caregiver of an elder."

Targeting people ages 40 to 60 from across the South Shore that may be taking on — or are already — the responsibilities of a caregiver for a elder.

"This program will help them with many of the questions we hear from people in the community," says Director of Elder Affairs Linda Ellworthy. There will be three seminars, each with a different focus, presented at no cost to participants. Local experts will give talks about specific issues that frequently face caregivers.

"You don't know you need to know something until you need it and then it's too late to plan," says Jane Reardon, Social Service League president. She has struggled with caring for elders in both her family and her husband's family, "it's important for people to know you're not the first person to go through it — and you're not the only one."

The first seminar will be held on Tuesday, April 29 to discuss how to protect estates from health care costs. If long-term care is needed for an elder, caregivers need to know how to protect their elder's and their own assets from being zapped.

Ellworthy's first advice to nearly everyone facing a legal issue involving elders is to go to an attorney who specializes in elder law, "the laws changes as fast as I can change my socks," says Ellworthy.

Local elder law attorney Paul Tierney and financial planner Robert Deutsch will be on hand to speak and to answer questions. They will talk about the advantages of a trust, liens and estate recovery.

The second seminar will cover ways to discuss driving with an elder. Reardon says this topic brings up a lot of issues, because essentially it is a role reversal, "as a child you expect your parents to make good decisions and when you see them making decisions that are not sound, it's difficult...it's a hard lesson to learn."

Kathleen Capuzzo from South Shore Elder Services as well as Lisa Matos of the Cohasset Police Department will speak on the warning signs of a person's ability to drive and how to start the a discussion on giving up the car keys.

The last night will cover the differences between senior housing communities. Representatives from Linden Ponds and Harbor House, both in Hingham, and Sunrise Assisted Living in Cohasset will bring information about their communities. The differences between independent living, assisted living and long-term care will be covered.

"At the point in time you are making the decision, what's the best option? Making the right decision at the beginning is important," says Reardon. Often if an elder is hospitalized, when they are released the family isn't given much time to decide where to move them to, if they can no longer live independently.

"Looking at housing options is overwhelming," says Sandra Halverson, vice president of the Social Service League. Knowing what options are out there ahead of time can alleviate some of the stress in the situation, she says.

The program fits well with the missions of both groups and it's not the first time first time the Social Service League and Elder Affairs have joined forces. The League runs the Meals on Wheels program in Cohasset, a Christmas Angel program where baskets are made for seniors who might not otherwise get a gift and brings homemade meals to seniors on Christmas and Thanksgiving.

Although the seminars take place in Cohasset, interested residents from across the South Shore are welcome and encouraged to attend. The Social Service League serves all the surrounding communities on the South Shore.

Part of Social Service League's mission is to educate and to fill needs that are not being met within the community. Through a needs assessment survey and discussions with the Cohasset Elder Affairs, they determined caregivers' needs were not being met — and the seminars were born.

"The more community agencies working together to put on a program the better. That way we're not duplicating work and it strengthens the program," says Ellworthy. "Later, if someone runs into a problem, they know where to start."

The "Guiding the Caregiver of an Elder" is a free event, but pre-registration is required. All seminars will begin with a light supper between 5:30 and 6p.m. followed by the presentation and discussion between 6 and 7p.m. Call Cohasset Elder Affairs to sign up, 781-383-9112.

Antique Appraisal Day returning to Cohasset

As people had to be turned away from the last appraisal day, a maximum of three items per individual will be allowed.

Skinner Inc. Appraisers are coming to Cohasset again for the second Antique Appraisal Day. Mark calendars for Saturday, March 29, to bring antiques to be appraised. For large pieces, several good photographs can be used by the appraiser. Be sure to include photos of any special markings, numbers or other details that may assist in the appraisal process.

This event is sponsored by the Friends of Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs and will take place at St. Anthony's Parish Center, 10 Summer St., Cohasset, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Appraisals are $10 per item, or $25 for three items. Excluded items include coins, stamps, jewelry and musical instruments. As people had to be turned away from the last appraisal day, a maximum of three items per individual will be allowed.

Snacks and refreshments will be available to enjoy while waiting to meet with the appraiser.

For more information, call Cohasset Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112 or John Campbell, president of the Friends at 617-909-5687.

Music from the Gaslight Era

On Sunday, April 6th, from 2 to 4 p.m., the Cohasset Historical Society will offer a special program titled "Popular Music of the Gaslight Era" by musician and educator, John Root.

Root, both a vocalist and instrumentalist, presents programs on popular music from the first half of the twentieth century for audiences of all ages. He brings a diverse repertoire of instrumental and vocal musical styles to his performances and demonstrates how song lyrics offer insights into the customs and values of a bygone period in our history.

Through the music, we learn how our country's multicultural diversity at the turn of the previous century created unique musical styles that continue to delight and inspire audiences around the world. The cost of this exceptional program is $10.00 per person and includes light refreshment.

All are invited to the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St. for an afternoon of most enjoyable entertainment.

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

"Among the Breakers," a play about a lighthouse in a storm, was performed on the town hall stage on March 25, 1892 by a cast of Cohasset locals. The names of cast members such as Tower, Nichols, Collier, Gammons and Souther are still familiar today. The play thrilled audiences with an orchestra and special effects of thunder and lightning.

The Cohasset Historical Society is grateful to those who remember us with donations of Cohasset photographs, textiles and memorabilia. We would like to take this occasion to thank you for your continued generous support.

If you have enjoyed reading our columns and discovering some of what we hold in our archives, please consider supporting the Historical Society. Your tax-deductible donation can be sent to: Cohasset Historical Society, PO Box 627, Cohasset, MA 02025. All donations are gratefully appreciated.

HAPPY EASTER

Hi Cohasset. I want to send out a few messages to all to enjoy the beginning of Spring and for all those who celebrate and enjoy, a very Happy Easter this weekend. There are many events and notes to share this week so get ready to read and start scheduling some dates for the spring and summer.

ACCEPTANCE

Amanda Simpson of Cohasset has been accepted to Thomas College starting in September of 2008. Amanda is the daughter of Paul Simpson and Lynda Cody. She plans to major in Human Resource Management. Congratulations to you Amanda.

BIRD-WATCHER

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting on Tuesday, March 25, in Bates Hall at the Second Congregational Church. Refreshments will be served at 9 a.m. and the business meeting will begin at 9:30. The program titled "Beyond Silent Spring", will be presented by Past President and avid bird watcher Sally Avery. She will discuss the variety of natural communities in Massachusetts today, their resident birds, and the conservation status of these habitats.

MARATHON EFFORT

Here is a piece from a former Cohasset resident about something that she is doing in honor of her mom. "My name is Eileen Ridge and grew up in Cohasset and was a CHS alum, Class of 2000. This April, I am running the Boston Marathon, in honor of my mom, Kate Ridge, who passed away in May of 06 of melanoma cancer. My mom was a long time resident of Cohasset, as well as the CHS JV Field Hockey Coach for years. While a coach, she was able to inspire my sisters, as well as other women to be amazing athletes, as well individuals.

"I will be joining the Run for Cover Team to help combat the rising rate of melanoma and melanoma deaths, by running the 112th Boston Marathon. By making a pledge on my behalf, you are supporting the Melanoma Foundation of New England, which provides a variety of educational programs targeting the prevention and early detection of skin cancer and melanoma for both children and adults. After losing my mom to this disease I feel personally invested in raising the awareness of the dangers of the sun. Melanoma is the deadliest form of skin cancer and is rising faster than any other cancer. By 2010, one in every 50 Americans will be diagnosed with this disease. With that said, melanoma is curable if detected in an early stage! My goal is to raise at least $3,500 by April 21 for the Melanoma Foundation of New England. Please help me reach this goal with your pledge. Your donation is tax deductible. The easiest way to make a donation is to visit my fundraising website at:www.firstgiving.com/eileenridge If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me at 781-738-0049 or Eileen.ridge@yahoo.com." This is a cause that definitely needs more research, money and a cure!

PANCAKE BREAKFAST

In the spirit of good food and fellowship, don't miss the pancake breakfast on Easter Sunday from 8-9 am at Second Congregational Church (located right next to Cohasset Town Hall). Friends, neighbors, and visiting relatives are all welcome at this community event. Cost is $5/person or $15/family. The timing of the pancake breakfast is perfect for those either attending the 7:30am Sonrise Service at Sandy Beach or the 9:15am family service at Second Congregational. If you have questions, contact the church office at scc@2ndcc.org or (781) 383-0345. Come one, come all.

CMI FUN RUN

Please "save the date" for CMI's Jack Hubbard Memorial Fun Run planned for Saturday morning July 19th. The race will be a 5K and is a fundraiser for CMI. The entry fee will be $25 and includes a tee shirt! More information will come so mark your calendars and look forward to hearing and reading more about this event.

POST-PROM

Calling all parents of CHS Seniors. The next Post-Prom planning meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, March 26 at 7 p.m. in the Deer Hill Library. Please enter through the front door. All senior parents encouraged to come.

THOREAU EVENING

Having lived: Henry David Thoreau and How He Did It. On Thursday, March 27th at 7 pm, come to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for an evening of story, history, and conversation with Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull. Jan is Minister of First Parish in Cohasset Unitarian Universalist. In Thoreau, she sees a person who unwrapped the distinctive gift that he was while living that gift in community, a person who played as readily as he pondered, a person whose penchant for seeing the world freshly and recording it remarkably continues to open eyes, ears, hearts, and minds. This is a free program. This is a Cohasset Reads Together program. Federally funded with LSTA funds through the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners.

GUEST HARPIST

Beechwood Congregational Church is having a guest harpist, Genevieve Poole, who will be playing at our service on Resurrection Sunday. The service begins at 10 a.m.. What beautiful sounds to hear and listen too.

ELECTION SUPPER

Calling all candidates and voters! The Annual Election Supper, a springtime tradition, will be held at the Beechwood Congregational Church on Church Street. Candidates and voters are invited to get together for dinner on Thursday evening, April 3rd at 6:30. Dinner will include roast pork, roast potatoes, carrots, Harvard Beets, dessert as well as beverages. Before dinner, all candidates will be introduced. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children. Reserve your tickets by calling 781-383-1298.

That is all for this week. Please send in all of your news no later than 5 pm on Tuesdays.

Ed Lyons of Lyons Fire Equipment goes through the unique features of a hybrid car that firefighters have to think about if faced with a car accident involving a hybrid vehicle.

Andrew Thomas of the Hull Fire Department and Cohasset Fire Lt. Bob Protulis get a closer look at a hybrid engine before their safety workshop at the fire station.

Hybrid vehicle fires

Herb Chambers conducts training

With the continuing rise in fuel prices and environment concerns, hybrid vehicles are more and more popular with the buying public. Their increased popularity has also created concerns by emergency response personnel who face additional dangers in the event of vehicle fires. A hybrid vehicle has a gasoline motor and an electric motor powered by a battery. As the vehicle travels it operates off the battery powered motor at speeds less than 30 mph. At speeds over 30 mph the gasoline engine operates the vehicle and charges the battery system.

The hybrid vehicle's battery motor system is a high voltage device that, if improperly handled in emergency situations, could result in sever electric shock or even electrocution. Additionally, the chemicals in the battery system are toxic and in the event of fire, which fully engages the battery, can produce toxic gases. None of these hazards need be a risk to fire fighters and other emergency response personnel who are properly trained in hybrid technology and emergency procedures.

A hybrid vehicle has a gasoline motor and an electric motor powered by a battery.

The Herb Chambers Companies which has 44 automobile dealerships in New England and sells numerous hybrid vehicles offered this training at the Cohasset Fire Department on Tuesday, March 4th. The Cohasset Fire Department invited other firefighters from neighboring towns including Hull, Scituate, Hingham and Norwell.

Ron Corey of Herb Chambers Honda points to the specialized battery that hybrids have which has different safety considerations for firefighters to think about. At the training session are, from left, Kevin Donovan of Cohasset fire, Ed Lyons who was leading the workshop, Lt. Bob Protulis of Cohasset, Sean Cannon of Scituate fire, Ed Hohmann of Herb Chambers, Laura Morrison of Cohasset, John Dolan of Scituate fire, and Andrew Thomas of Hull fire.

Triathlon, Emotional Armor team up with new T-shirts charities," says Burnett.

Hoffman's positive outlook on life didn't come without significant personal struggle — struggle that ultimately led to the creation of Emotional Armor.

Hoffman moved to Cohasset last summer from Newburyport. Although t-shirts are currently the primary canvas for her inspirational messages, Hoffman says her company is more than a t-shirt company. Calling it a "lifestyle messaging company" Hoffman says her goal and vision is bigger than a t-shirt — it's about promoting a state of mind through positive thought. She's in the process of expanding her messages to other wearable mediums — sneakers, belt buckles, jewelry.

To show her commitment to doing good, she donates her business's net profits — yes, all of it — to two charities close to her heart. The funds go toward a cultural enrichment program for children to help develop self-esteem and self-confidence as well as the Jeanne Geiger Crisis Center for its work in family violence prevention.

"I love that there is no agenda for either of us. We're just trying to do something good and to be a part of something bigger than ourselves."

— Jenifer Hoffman, Emotional Armor

"My dream is to have every child, in addition to science, math, English, social studies, be taught to be self-confident and that every person can make a huge difference in the world," says Hoffman. "I tend to dream big, that's just how I am."

Her messages are simple, yet empowering. She has 38 different designs on colorful and comfortable t-shirts, each with tailored messages for gender and age. For women, there's "princess. not in need of rescue" and "never underestimate me;" for men, "good will always prevail," and "when life knocks you down...get up."

The shirts are also available for kids. Phrases like "natural born hero" and "life is an experiment...wear goggles" appear on boys' shirts, while girls' shirt have "let the world hear your voice" and "small body big dreams."

Even babies can be inspired with messages like "destined for greatness" and "worthy of wings."

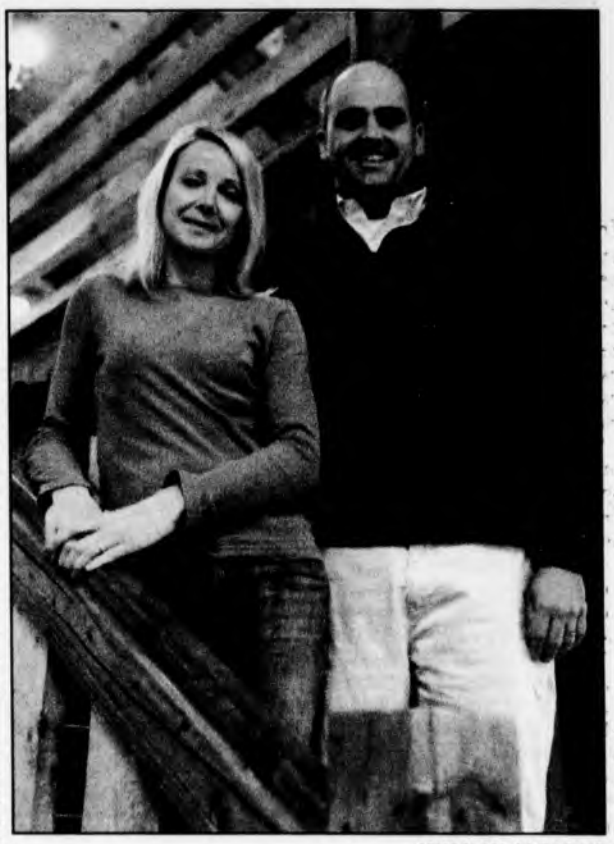
For Hoffman, Emotional Armor was born after a series of life-changing events that occurred in a short three-month period. She was involved in a serious bicycling accident during a triathlon. Then, during her recovery, she was assaulted by an inebriated 25-year-old man who lived in her small neighborhood in Newburyport while taking a walk. Instead of dwelling on the negativity of these events, she drew strength from them.

The District Attorney pressed for two-year jail sentence for her assaulter, but Hoffman stood up at court to petition her attacker be given a chance to change.

"Going to jail for two years was not the answer. He wouldn't be getting what he needed. He needed a job, he needed to be in treatment and have parameters," says Hoffman. The court listened and the man began treatment, worked a part-time job and wore a GPS-monitoring device.

"I really believe that was the right thing," says Hoffman — and it changed her life for the better. Shortly after she started her company on the "unshakeable belief in the goodness of people."

Both Burnett and Hoffman are enthusiastic about the collaboration — a project that complements what each does individually. The Cohasset Triathlon will be a personal milestone for Hoffman, it will be her first since her bike wreck in 2006. But, she says her story is only one of many triathlon participants.



"Everybody has a story and each one is more inspiring than the next," Hoffman says. She's inspired by the mother of three who gets up at 5a.m. to train for the triathlon so she doesn't disrupt her kids' schedules and the guy who's out there competing with a mountain bike.

"It's the only sport where everybody — elite triathletes to first-time competitors — can compete on the same course doing something they love," says Hoffman.

The limited edition t-shirts will be on sale on the Cohasset Triathlon website (www.cohassettri.com). In addition to the inspirational messages on the front of the shirt, the back will have "Cohasset Triathlon" on it, with the first 'o' being replaced with a peace sign and the second 'o' with a heart, just like the Emotional Armor logo.

Emotional Armor product is available in Cohasset Village. The adult line can be found at Ports & Company and the kids line is at Twist.

More information on both efforts can be found on the web, visit www.emotionalarmor.com and www.cohassettri.com

"just breathe"
"fueled by determination"
"clip in and hold on"
"it's all about the transition"
"one stroke one pedal one step at a time"

Triathlon pros come to Cohasset

Every race starts with one foot in front of the other and Cohasset Triathlon Race Director Bill Burnett wants to make every effort to get the race off on the right foot. To that end, the Cohasset Triathlon Association is bringing two renowned triathletes to the Red Lion Inn this Saturday, March 22 to talk to 200 athletes swimming, running, and cycling at the 2008 triathlon.

Karen Smyers and Dede Griesbauer will share advice and tips on the art of competing in a triathlon. Smyers is a six-time U.S. Pro National champion and 1995 Ironman World Champion. She is still devoted to the sport and is currently coaching several elite racers. Greisbauer was a top finisher in the Ironman World Championships in Hawaii last year and continues to race on the pro circuit today. Both will compete alongside the 700-plus athletes signed up for the sold out race.

Smyers and Griesbauer will offer specific triathlon training tips, advise on proper triathlon equipment, give pointers on fast transitions and speak on general race safety.

"I think I have to be an advocate for safety and do the best I can to make sure people are prepared for the race," said Burnett. People from all over Massachusetts are signed up to attend the event. Doors will open at 2p.m. and the speakers will begin at 3p.m. Cohasset Triathlon sponsor Nike will be on hand and the special edition Cohasset Triathlon Emotional Armor t-shirts will be for sale.

Volunteers, interested athletes wanting to know more about the sport are welcome to attend the meeting free of charge. Burnett encourages racers to come early to socialize with other race participants and race coordinators.

Rotary's Road Race by the Sea is right around the corner events. With that distinction, nearly 1000 runners come from all over the US to compete. Pre-registrants already include representatives from 18 states and two countries. Many runners use the race as part of their Boston Marathon training.

"We think it's one of the premiere 10K road races in the spring for New England," says Goodwin, bringing a mix of elite and casual runners.

The race proceeds benefit the many causes, both locally and internationally, the Cohasset Rotary Club is involved with.

"We don't keep any of the money for ourselves, it all goes right back out," says Goodwin. The Rotary Club is made up of about 25 business and professional people from Cohasset or with ties to Cohasset. Their major fundraisers are the telephone book and the road race. International efforts like funding the digging of wells for public schools in the Philippines and contributing to the fight to eradicate polio worldwide. Locally, the Rotary Club supports Wellspring, Appalachia Service Project and CHS scholarships.

"The Road Race is an opportunity to bring a lot of people to town for a fun event and for the Rotary Club to advance our projects."

— Brad Goodwin, race director

While the race is a large part of the day, the Fran Coffey Memorial Fun Walk is also a big draw. Coffey was instrumental in organizing the Road Race as well as the fun walk year after year, and a few years ago, the walk was renamed to serve as a memorial in his honor. The fun walk begins at 10a.m. at Sandy Beach. The proceeds from the walk will be donated to "People In Need" at St. Patrick's in Roxbury and Bishop Ruocco House for Girls in Lakeville.

Bill Taylor of Scituate will run his 19th consecutive Road Race by the Sea on April 6.

"I think at this point I do it to keep the streak going," says Taylor, who is a Cohasset native and CHS Class of 1980. He's saved all his shirts and bib numbers from all his races, noting his times each year. Each year, his goal is to finish in less than 50 minutes — and he's succeeded four times.

Although he was never a runner in high school and college, Taylor now runs 12 months a year to stay in shape. Road races, like the road race by the sea, give him the incentive to get out there and pound the pavement.

"I love the course. The best part is as soon as you hit Sandy Beach and you're looking out at the ocean," says Taylor, especially, he adds, if there is a tail wind. Then, things get a little tougher on Forest Avenue (a.k.a. roller coaster road).

"As you run that first hill from Rocky Beach, that's just a killer. But, after finishing Forest Ave. the rest is a piece of cake," Taylor says.

Linda Fechter, a Cohasset resident, agrees Forest Avenue is Cohasset's version of the Boston Marathon's Heartbreak Hill. For her, at least, there is a light at the end of the tunnel.

"When I'm running up those hills, I'm thinking about whether I want to have one hot dog or two," she says. A post-race celebration, bigger and better this year, is held at the South Shore Community Center on the Cohasset Common. The community is invited to partake in hot dogs and music by the Armstrong Brothers Band.

"This race is a small town road race. People call your name as you run along the course. It just has that apple pie feel. The Rotary does a great job of keeping it simple," says Fechter.

While New England weather is always unpredictable, Goodwin is looking forward to the perfect day on April 6, "this year is going to be another beautiful day, 50 to 52 degrees, sunny and the wind at your back."

The town's spectacular ocean vista provides a backdrop as runners in last year's Cohasset Road Race by the Sea tackle "heart-break" hill on Forest Avenue. The 32nd running of the race is set for Sunday, April 6.

Volunteers needed

Volunteers are needed for a variety of positions before, during, and after the race. If interested in volunteering, e-mail 2008@roadracebythesea.com or call 781-223-2513.

'Outdoor humor' subject of slide presentation

A new slide presentation from Michael Tougias — Michael Tougias, author of 14 books, presents a narrated "outdoor humor" slide presentation Thursday, April 3, at 7 p.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 35 Ripley Road,

The presentation is based on his book "There's A Porcupine In My Outhouse" which won "Best Nature Book of 2003" as awarded by the Independent Publishers Association of America. The book and slide show are based on misadventures on Tougias' early years of exploring New England's backcountry and at his remote cabin in Northern Vermont. Topics covered in the slide presentation include: Tougias' first disastrous trip to his newly bought cabin, the history of Outhouses, encounters with Bear, moose, fishing spiders and porcupine, and the history of Mountain Men. The slide presentation also take the audience to special places in Vermont's Northeast Kingdom, Northern NH, and Northern Maine. Besides the adventure and exploration theme, Tougias mixes in conservation and the therapeutic powers of the woods.

The prologue of "There's A Porcupine In My Outhouse!" further explains the evolution of this new slide presentation: "In 1978, when I was twenty-two, I spent $8,500 on a tiny A-frame cabin and six acres of land overlooking a pond in Northern Vermont. I thought I would live out my mountain-man fantasy that had been planted from reading adventure books as a kid. I would be Jim Bridger, Daniel Boone, and Lewis and Clark all rolled into one, knowing exactly what to do in every outdoor situation. I fancied myself as lord and master of my six acres. What actually happened was quite different."

Michael Tougias is the author of River Days: Exploring the Connecticut River, King Philip's War, The Blizzard of '78, Quabbin: A History and Explorers Guide, Nature Walks in Eastern Massachusetts, and several other books. He can be visitied on the web at michaeltougias.com.

This event is free. Seating is limited. This event is a Cohasset Reads Together event.

Having Lived: Henry David Thoreau and How He Did It —

Michael Tougias

On Thursday, March 27th at 7 pm, join us for an evening of story, history, and conversation with Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull. Jan is Minister of First Parish in Cohasset Unitarian Universalist. In Thoreau, she sees a person who unwrapped the distinctive gift that he was while living that gift in community, a person who played as readily as he pondered, a person whose penchant for seeing the world freshly and recording it remarkably continues to open eyes, ears, hearts, and minds. Free. This is a Cohasset Reads Together program. Federally funded with LSTA funds through the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners.

Holiday Closing — The library will be closed Sunday, March 23 for Easter Sunday.

Good Books — Looking for suggestions for your next read? Try the NoveList database found at our website www.cohassetlibrary.org. Accessible from home, office or in the library, NoveList lists award winners, author read-a-likes, and reviews of 150,000 fiction titles. Stormwater Management Bylaw Q&A:

The following was provided by the Stormwater Management Committee.

At the upcoming Town Meeting on March 29th voters will be asked to support a Stormwater Management Bylaw to address the causes of serious flooding and pollution problems in the Town of Cohasset due to unregulated stormwater runoff.

"By establishing a stormwater permitting process, this article is designed to ensure that effective management controls are incorporated into the design and construction of future developments in Town. If passed, the article will also enable the Town to meet the federally imposed deadline of June 2008 to comply with the requirements of the Federal Clean Water Act.

The Stormwater Management Committee was appointed by the Board of Selectmen to make recommendations on the drafting and the adoption of bylaws or other regulatory controls to prevent additional stormwater issues.

During a two-year process the Committee solicited comments, input and ideas from a vast group of parties including various town boards and committees, impacted groups and abutters, state and federal agencies, other towns, stormwater management engineers and experts as well as the general public. The following is a list of frequently asked questions and answers on the proposed bylaw:

• The Federal Clean Water Act requires regulation for developments of 1 acre or more. Why did the Stormwater Committee feel the need to regulate beyond that threshold here in Cohasset?

ANSWER: In addition to setting a limit of 1 acre nationally the Clean Water Act also strongly encourages cities and towns to adopt local control measures that recharge the soil and reduce the amount of stormwater going to drainage systems, which ultimately causes the pollution of local water bodies.

A Cohasset Town bylaw would not have much effect on anything if it simply adopted the 1-acre threshold. Few projects, if any, in Cohasset ever reach the 1-acre threshold, yet we have serious pollution and flooding problems all over town. The Committee took into consideration the causes of the flooding and pollution problems and determined that many of the problems we face result from decades of development that didn't require proper runoff controls.

When you combine this with rocky soil conditions in Town you have a situation that has taken its toll on Cohasset. Therefore the Committee opted for regulating projects which add a net impervious area of 500 square feet through and administrative approval process. A more stringent regulation involving a permit and public hearing would be triggered for projects more than 5,000 square feet.

The permits and regulations required by the proposed bylaw do not limit projects to 500 and 5,000 square feet, but they do require an engineer's design, review and stamp of approval.

Most stormwater flooding and pollution control techniques are simple measures that can be taken by homeowners and developers when they design their projects. Elements like dry wells and swales and landscaping treatments are very effective at controlling runoff. Most folks want to do the right thing. Do we really need regulation?

ANSWER: The Committee feels very strongly that public education and outreach is vital to the process of controlling stormwater. This is evidenced by the number of meetings it has held with so many public entities.

Our vision as a Stormwater Committee is to continue the public awareness process and to act as a host for bringing together people in the town to identify problems and recommend solutions. The Town is presently responding to a number flooding and pollution concerns with proposed publicly funded capital improvements to address and correct problems caused by decades of unregulated development.

At the same time, the Stormwater Committee and many residents feel it would be a shame to spend so much public money on fixing the flooding and pollution problems that exist today without making sure that future developments aren't adding to the problem by making the same mistakes of the past.

From a fiscal standpoint, it is felt that if the town holds off regulation longer, it will have more expensive problems to correct later.

Remember, stormwater permitting does not limit development in any way. It simply requires developments to address potential run-off as they should.

The by-law places an emphasis on recharging stormwater back into the soil. What if I live on ledge?

ANSWER: Again, the bylaw does not restrict impervious material from being placed on a lot, nor does require recharging run off that is already leaving the site. It does require that developments adding a net increase of 500 square feet or more demonstrate that post-construction run-off does not exceed pre-construction run-off.

There are many time proven effective ways to reduce surface run-off, (e.g. dry-wells, embankments, swales, etc.). It is worth noting that if a permit requirement is triggered on a parcel with good natural drainage characteristics (like a building on a grassy field, or a sandy subsurface) runoff controls may not even be necessary — because any run off would naturally recharge right back into the soil.

On the other hand, the placement of a roof or asphalt over solid granite would not be considered a "net increase of impervious material" in most cases because the water is already running off the lot. The bylaw states that one may not "increase" the amount of surface run-off. It does not require the collection water that is already running off the lot.

Can we have an effective storm water management program that incorporates Best Management Practices (BMP's) for surface runoff? This is a big point of emphasis in the Environmental Protection Agency's resource information.

ANSWER: The Stormwater Management Committee is already actively supporting the installation of BMP structures in various parts of town. BMP's are a way of collecting existing runoff and recharging it back into the ground to naturally filter the pollution it picks up along the way. The Committee's Annual Report outlines these activities that are now taking place around Little Harbor and James Brook due to the committees focus and resolve. The committee has successfully acquired a substantial amount of grant money from the state and Cohasset Community Preservation Committee to install BMP's and a major function of the Committee going forward will be to build on this success.

Installing BMP's without regulating future development, however, will threaten the effectiveness of the BMP's now being installed thereby posing a serious potential for wasting money.

The Stormwater Management Committee hopes this information is useful as you consider your vote on the Stormwater Management Bylaw at the March 29th Town Meeting. Please stay tuned for more information on this issue forthcoming in the Cohasset Mariner.

Design a logo for Cohasset contest

The mission is to design a graphic identity for Cohasset that encapsulates and expresses best the beauty or the unique character of the town.

In order to create a stronger identity/image for the Town of Cohasset, the EDC needs your good ideas and artistic talents to fulfill its objective of better marketing the town we are all so proud of.

All are invited to participate in a friendly and fun competition: professionals or amateurs, grownups or kids. The winner will receive his/her logo on tee shirts, the public recognition of the community, not to mention "the artist's immortality."

The mission — if you should accept it — is to design a graphic identity for Cohasset that encapsulates and expresses best the beauty or the unique character of the town. You are free to use scenes, monuments, symbols, letters, or whatever, so long as it evokes Cohasset and no other town. Keep in mind that, to be effective, a logo should be small, clear and simple. The dominant color that needs to be used is the blue/green shade of PMS 3275*.

The deadline to submit your designed logo to the EDC, care of Alain Pinel, EDC, c/o Town Clerk's Office, Town Hall is April 11. In early April, a special Logo Selection Panel will be created (composed of one member of the South Shore Art Center, one graphic specialist and one member of the EDC), to choose the best design.

The winning logo will be trademarked and featured on Cohasset approved marketing and clothing items to be sold through local vendors. It will be on display this summer at the South Shore Art Center's Art Festival.

For the EDC: Alain Pinel

 Note: How did we arrive at this choice of color?. First, we thought that blue would best reflect the vision of our town "by-the-sea". Then, to create the "Cohasset Blue", we worked in the primary light color spectrum of red-green-blue. After playing a while with various shades of blue-green, we came across a magic number that will look very familiar to the residents: 143... (Remember Minot?). That was it. All what we had to do was translate this color to the PMS code 3275.*

OPINION

Special days

We know that most municipalities have special events at some point during the year that help define their sense of community.

However, considering Cohasset's size – we think we have an abundance of good fortune when it comes to our "special days" that we look forward to and then enjoy once they have arrived.

The really nice thing is that more events have been or are being added to the calendar.

The Village Stroll in December is a case in point. It started just a few years back and has become a regular feature of the holiday season. Getting some hot soup outside Bia, lining up for a sausage from "the Sausage Guy," and sampling some of the fare from the newly opened Carmela Drew – were some of this year's delicious highlights!

The stroll is in addition to the ever popular and traditional Village Fair, which no true Cohasseter ever misses.

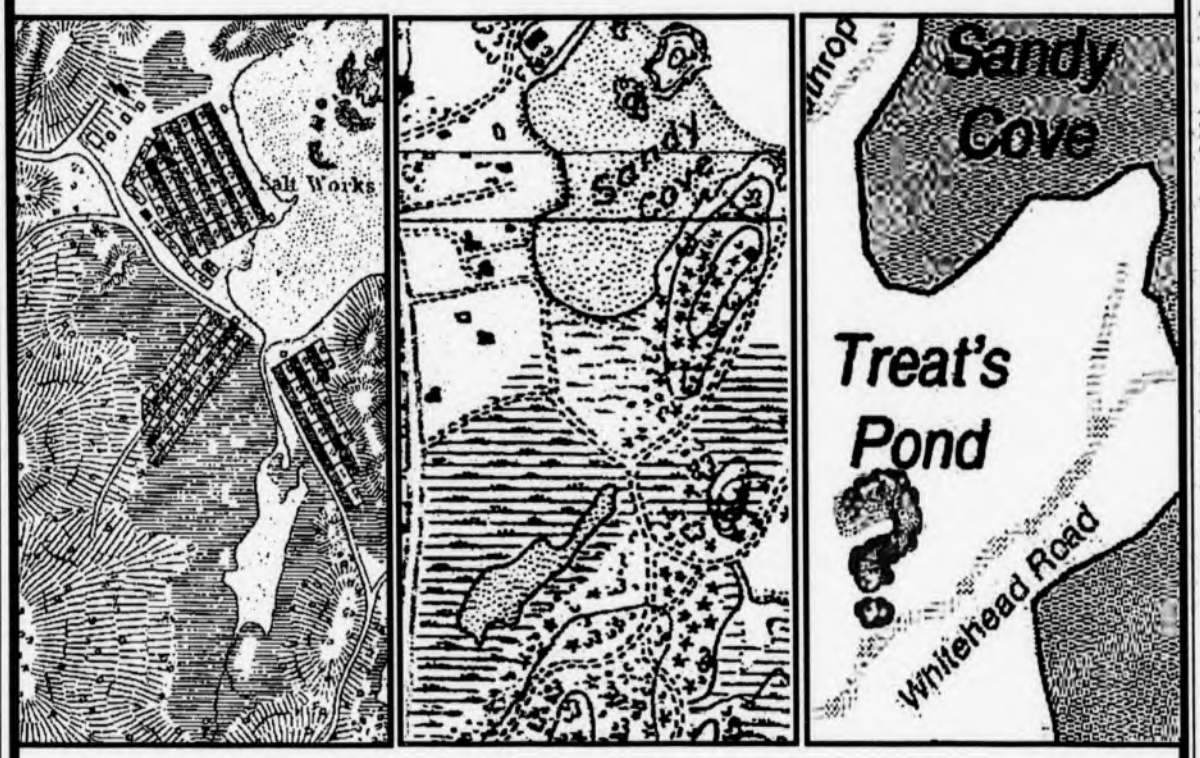
One of the first harbingers of spring is the Cohasset Road Race by the Sea, a premier event that showcases both athletic talent and our incredible ocean vistas and colonial charm.

The Cohasset Triathlon, which started last year, is another special event that turns into a total day.

The nice thing about the both the road race and the tri is that the events provide a memorable day for the athletes, their friends and families and regular spectators.

What would Cohasset be without the American Cancer Society Relay For Life? The Cohasset Relay has become a regular part of the late-spring/early summer landscape.

We look forward to the Festival on the Common every year. It is both a feast for the eyes and for the palate, whether you hanker for a lobster roll at First Parish or some strawberry shortcake in the cozy courtyard at Second Congregational. There is something wonderfully relaxing about the Festival. No carnival rides or pressure experienced at typical town fairs. Everything from the trolley trip, if one parks at Deer Hill, to the children's tent featuring young artists is fun and memorable.



Now plans are afoot to add a "Cohasset Day" in September. The Economic Development Committee is hard at work brainstorming and coming up with ideas to provide a late summer/early fall special day downtown that could include myriad of activities. We think the timing would be perfect and look forward to hearing updates as plans progress.

In the meantime the EDC is looking for your ideas in designing a "graphic identity" for Cohasset.

EDC member Alain Pinel explains that interested people are free to use scenes, monuments, symbols, letters, or whatever, so long as it evokes Cohasset and no other town. He says, "keep in mind that, to be effective, a logo should be small, clear and simple". The dominant color that needs to be used is the blue/green shade of PMS 3275*. [Note: How did the EDC arrive at this choice of color? First, the EDC thought that blue would best reflect the vision of our town "by-the-sea". Letters to the Editor

Math and Science Night sponsors, volunteers appreciated

To the Editor,

As co-coordinators of the annual Science and Math Night at the Osgood School, we would like to thank the many sponsors and volunteers who helped make this event one to remember.

Local sponsors were invaluable to the event, helping to offset the costs of special presentations, donating a wide range of materials needed, and providing food and drinks for the student exhibitors. Thanks go to EMD Serono, OfficeMax, Cohasset Dental, Shoe Market Kids, the South Shore Music Circus, JJ's Dairy Hut, Strecker Eye Center, Paperscapes, Cohasset Pizza House, Papa Ginos, Shaw's, Stop & Shop and Atlantic Bagel for their generous contributions.

Thirty-one families created interactive science and math exhibits to share with more than 600 visitors over the course of the evening. Volunteers worked tirelessly to help the event unfold without incident. We'd like to thank the following families who expended great effort to make the event successful: Bradley Albanese's family, Jake Allen's family, Emily Appleton's family, Alexander and Natasha Arnold's family, Justin Bierman's family, Chase Bomeisler's family, Will Bowen's family, Matthew Dickey's family, Ian Dunkelberger's family, Alec Durkin's family, Gabriella Finocchio's family, Tucker Fulton's family, Henry Greentree's family, Will and Molly Greer's family, Olivia Hansen's family, Andrew Harzich's family, Emilee Lyons' family, Mia MacGregor's family, Jack Macmillan's family, Emma Matthews' family, Olivia McAlarney's family, Martha Miskanic's family, Samantha Naples' family, Lilly and Caroline Patterson's family, Kevin Perrone's family, Charlie, Katie and Annie Pyne's family, Jackson Roberts' family, Bella Sestito's family, Minnie Stavis' family, Annie Toomey's family, Abby, Anna and Regan Thomas' family, Bryan Thomas' family, Will and Gray Thomas' family, and Jerome and Grace Vainisi's family.

In addition, we'd like to thank David Magnussen and his CHS Marine Science students for their fantastic saltwater aquarium exhibit, David Young and his CHS Engineering students for their exciting CO2 dragster exhibit and Carole Bierman and her CHS math students for their fun exhibit. The elementary students could clearly see that science is important in all Cohasset schools. Additional thanks go to Osgood faculty members Betsy Ogden and Leslie Diminnie for their participation in the event, going above and beyond the normal school day to continue to educate the students.

We are grateful to Dr. Fawn Stevenson and Dr. Gregory Conard of Crazy Paws for their live animal science exhibit and patience throughout the evening. The students really enjoyed visiting with them. We also sincerely appreciate the South Shore Astronomical Society's volunteers who arrived with high-powered telescopes so that the students could explore the night sky.

Special thanks go to Karyn Nee who designed the limited edition tee shirts, the flyers, the tickets and fabulous posters for the event. Thanks to Ron Goodwin of Goodwin Graphics for bringing the tee shirt design to life.

We'd also like to thank Janet Sheehan, the principal of the Osgood School and her administrative staff including Anita Ross and Judy Figueiredo for their unfailing support. And last, but certainly not least, we'd like to thank Ted Holland, Asa Gallagher, and Joe Davis, the amazing custodial staff, for their hard work before, during, and especially after, the event. We simply could not have done it without you.

We've really enjoyed organizing this event for the past four years and are pleased to see how it has grown from nine family exhibits to more than 30 in that amount of time. We have all of you to thank for that.

'Say it ain't so'

To the Editor:

Dear Making Tracks:

Great pictures (Mariner, March 14) of workers installing diffuser rings. Next time I'd suggest leaving the pictures of workers, on the water, without lifejackets out of the newspaper. OSHA frowns on such activity. Also please tell me that isn't an old Johnson outboard motor on the back of the raft! Cohasset wants to ban canoes from Lily Pond and they hire workers with a very polluting motor to spend time in our water supply. Say it ain't so.

Thank you for clearing up a few details about manganese. That is great news that "migration of manganese into pond water ...tends to increase a bit in the warmer months." So now Cohasset Water can shut down those diffuser rings from December to February and we all can enjoy winter activities on Lily Pond.

In another update, sometime can you explain why when the conditions were right the pond was completely frozen? So, if we've really come full circle we don't need to add air to the water in winter for a problem that occurs in the summer. Net result, it is unnecessary to stop winter activities on Lily Pond.

Fun Walk volunteers needed

To the Editor:

On April 6th the Fran Coffey Memorial Fun Walk will begin at 10 a.m. at Sandy Beach. The Fun walk in conjunction with the Cohasset Road Race by the Sea, is a fun way to enjoy a beautiful walk and help the Cohassset Rotary Club do good for two very worthwhile causes, the Bishop Roucco House for Girls in Lakeville, and St Patrick's of Roxbury's "People in Need" program.

Volunteers are urgently needed to help direct and cheer on the walkers around the 10k (6.2 mile) racecourse (or the shorter version). More information is available at www.roadracebythesea.com

Please email to:

2008@roadracebythesea.com or call 781-223-2513 for more information on how you can help.

Gates malfunction phone call protocol

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

More on Greenbush safety – We've spoken about railroad safety many times in these columns. But that is because it is so very important. Trains are very unforgiving as they go through our town. We would like to focus once more on crossing safety. Like all sophisticated systems, once in a while the train crossing systems malfunction. This is especially true during the initial operating months.

What should you do if you see a malfunction at a crossing? You may, in fact be the first person seeing the malfunction and as a good citizen you should report it to the authorities. So to whom do you report it? As you may have noticed, every crossing has a small green building called a signal bungalow near the crossing. The signal bungalow houses all of the electronic communications and controls to operate that crossing and communicate back to the MBTA's central communication center. For your reference we have included a photo of the signal bungalow at Pleasant Street, as a typical bungalow.

Each signal bungalow has a sign with white letters on a red background (see close up photo). Each signal bungalow has a DOT identification number, a milepost number (the number of miles to Boston) and an 800 number to call to report problems. The MBTA would like citizens to use this information to report malfunctions. However, we suggest that even if you call this number that you should also call 911 to report the malfunction to the local safety authorities. As a matter of policy they will notify the MBTA central dispatch. But, they will also be able to dispatch an available safety officer to the site for the protection of other citizens. The Town will also have a record of the incident.

Greenbush update – You may have been following some of the stories in the various newspapers about scheduling problems with the commuter rail system. From what we are hearing the addition of the Greenbush to the mix of commuter trains that serve the South Shore area may have caused some hiccups on the entire system. As we have mentioned before, all of the trains share common tracks between Braintree and Boston. Thus, the schedules will need to be adhered to rather stringently to get all of trains to and from Boston on a single set of tracks. Adding Greenbush to the mix of the other commuter rail lines only makes the scheduling more difficult.

We have it on reasonably good authority that the MBTA may begin to shuffle the commuter rail schedules around a bit to improve the on-time performance in all of the commuter lines. We understand they plan to announce scheduling changes on the commuter rail web site: www.mbta.com/schedules_and_maps/rail/

As soon as we are aware of the changes we will let you know.

A last Greenbush item relates to the proposed widening of Route 3A at King Street. You may have noticed that silt fence has been newly erected on the Route 3A side of this intersection. The new construction will add a left turn lane for the southbound Route 3A traffic at King Street and an acceleration lane for the vehicles merging onto Route 3A Northbound from King Street. The space for widening of Route 3A will be taken from the South side of Route 3A (the side of the medical building).

Words of supporters

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I wouldn't call it a very good week for Barak Obama, the Democratic candidate for president, what with his preacher running off at the mouth and Goddamning the country Barak wants to lead for its sins, both real and imaginary.

True, the candidate has rejected outright the ill-chosen comments of the Rev. Jeremiah Wright, his "spiritual adviser" for some 20 years, and certainly you can't pin the words of a supporter, even a close one, on the candidate himself.

If you believe that, then you'll have no trouble believing in President Blaine.

James G. Blaine, a former congressman, senator and secretary of state from Maine, was the Republican nominee for president in 1884, after General Sherman declined the nomination, saying "If nominated I shall not run; if elected I shall not serve."

They called him "the Plumed Knight," for his courage and integrity, although some of the bloom was beginning to wear off in the face of his apparent complicity in some shady business dealings with railroads.

The Democratic nominee was Grover Cleveland, the former mayor of Buffalo and governor of New York, who faced an almost insurmountable task as his party had not won a presidential election in 28 years since before the Civil War.

To make matters worse, scarcely two weeks after the nominating convention, the candidate's hometown newspaper, the Buffalo Evening Telegraph, came out with the news that he had fathered an illegitimate child and contributed to his support.

Republican tricksters dogged Cleveland throughout the campaign, pushing baby carriages and chanting "Ma! Ma! Where's my pa?"

That's where it stood on Wednesday, Oct. 29, the week before the election when a group of Protestant clergymen gathered in the Fifth Avenue Hotel in New York City for a breakfast meeting and a pep talk by the Republican candidate.

Blaine was introduced by the Rev. Samuel D. Burchard, pastor of the Murray Hill Presbyterian Church, who couldn't resist the temptation to refer to the Democrats as "the party of Rum, Romanism and Rebellion."

The reference was to the Democrats relaxed attitude toward the Demon Rum, the lack of enthusiasm on the part of some Democratic Copperheads to join in the Civil War and the attraction of the Democratic party to largely Irish Catholic immigrants.

Blaine ignored the pastor's alliterative description of his rivals but Arthur Pue Gorman, Cleveland's campaign manager, didn't. He made sure the phrase appeared prominently in newspapers all over the country in the six days before election.

Many people who had never voted before turned out on Election Day; those who liked a beer now and then; those who were tired of what was called "waving the bloody shirt;" and, most of all, Catholic immigrants clustered in New York.

Six days after the Rev. Burchard's unfortunate remark, Grove Cleveland was elected president of the United States by 25,000 votes out of more then 9.7 million cast. Blaine lost New York State by a mere 1,149 votes.

And Democrats were singing: "Ma! Ma! Where's my pa? Gone to the White House. Ha! Ha! Ha!"

Upgrades and other setbacks

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

Like many closet anthropologists I've always wanted to try the hunter-gatherer lifestyle, so I am loving the changes they're making over at the Cohasset Stop & Shop. The seemingly random rearrangement of everything has made finding my favorite foods nearly impossible — an involuntary crash diet of sorts that frankly couldn't have come at a better time for me. Today I burned 1500 calories just locating a bag of basmati rice — more energy than the rice itself contains. Grocery shopping has become a net negative metabolic activity. It's like a fat camp, but with Easter candy, half of which is on aisle 9-3/4, with the rest under a tarp in the employee men's room

My favorite part is the sign pointing out that this is all for our shopping convenience, as if the thought of flipping the entire store upside down and backwards would never have occurred to them had we not specifically requested it on one of those Customer Feedback forms. Don't they know Middle School tomfoolery when they read it? We don't need a fancy new organic cheese kiosk; just keep the ground sirloin relatively horse-free and we'll keep stopping and shopping. Where else are we going to go, Shaws? Please. We're not masochists

When you receive a letter from a bank, utility, or airline that begins, "In order to serve you better...", you know you're about to get reamed. If there's a phrase dripping with more unabashed Orwellian gall than that one I've yet to hear it. "In order to serve you better we have cut off your telephone service and left a dead skunk on your porch. Your phone service is now free, however the skunk is $18.95 a month. You may discontinue the skunk after 60 days, at which time we will replace it with a pile of rotting clams, which is $26.50. Opt out of the clams and we play hardball. We recommend that you subscribe to the skunk.

I can almost see now why the elderly reject newfangled ideas out of hand, barricade themselves in their homes and stubbornly continue to vote for Strom Thurmond.

Once you've lived through hundreds of these dubious upgrades you begin to question the merits of progress. I can almost see now why the elderly reject newfangled ideas out of hand, barricade themselves in their homes and stubbornly continue to vote for Strom Thurmond. Even when a genuine improvement happens and we cure the awful disease or invent the labor saving device, the main beneficiaries are usually our kids anyway — a bunch of ungrateful slobs — so what's the point? We've given them Coffee Heath Bar Cookie Dough ice cream and six generations of iPods. I for one would like to relax now.

Of all the painful upgrades you're likely to experience, your first kitchen renovation is the one you'll never forget. As with every major home improvement project the best way to approach an outdated kitchen is to ditch your home immediately and never look back. However, even the only intelligent choice may be impractical in a housing market that doesn't involve the actual buying or selling of houses. In that case I've developed a handy questionnaire to help you determine whether a kitchen update is right for you.

1) When you turn on the kitchen faucet, does a potable liquid of any kind, including seawater, come out?

2) Do your cabinets open and close most of the way, and are they any color aside from '72 guacamole'?

3) Over the next 18 months do you anticipate any event for which you might need, oh I don't know, a kitchen?

4) Do you have decent taste, standards of quality, and a respect for local building codes, but a surname that does not happen to be "Al-Waleed bin Talal bin Abdul Aziz Al Saud"?

If you answered "yes" to any of questions 1 through 4, I regret that your kitchen is not an upgrade candidate at this time. Its condition may deteriorate to the point where even the idea of spending barrowfuls of money while torturing your family seems like a reasonable plan, so there is always hope. In the meantime perhaps a new window treatment would add a splash of color to that corner with the exposed insulation and the d-CON bait blocks.

COMMENTARY

JIM DRYSDALE

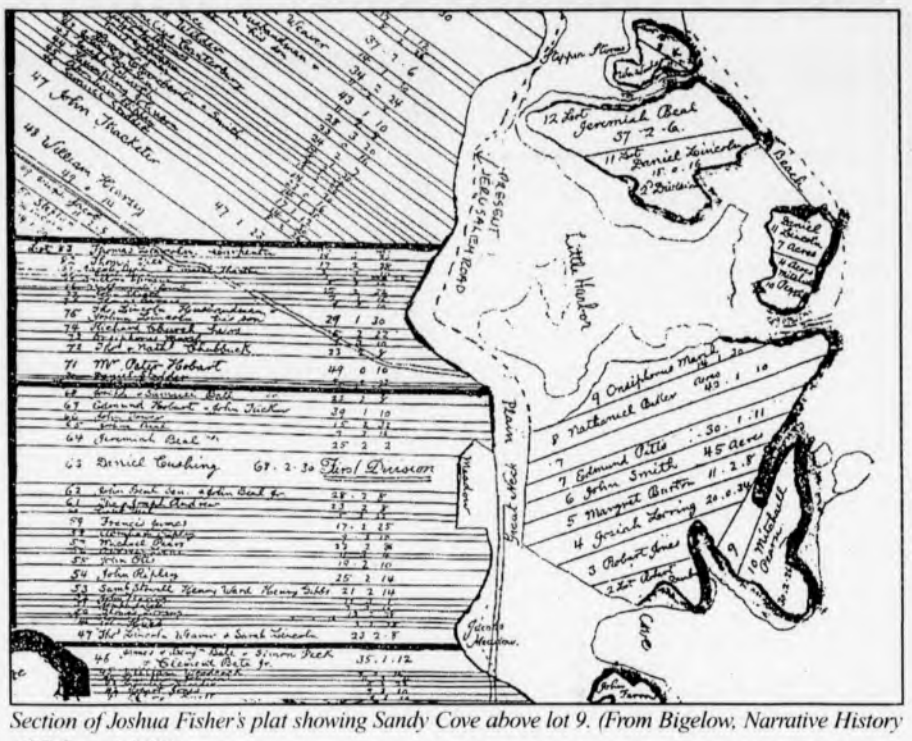
Satellite view of Sandy Cove area with contours enclosing homes expected to flood at normal high tides (inner) and at full moon tides (outer) with free tidal flow into Treat's Pond.

The rationale for converting Treat's Pond to a tidal pond has taken several twists and turns. The latest reason adopted by the selectmen is that it will reduce flooding in the Sandy Cove area. This seems unlikely. An examination of the consequences of creating free tidal flow indicates that this will create new and more damaging flooding, this time from the sea. I think it would be unwise to pursue this plan even if it cost us nothing at all.

The initial $275,000 study by the ACE had nothing to do with flooding but dealt largely with perceived bacterial pollution of Sandy Cove by Treat's Pond. This was an unnecessary project. The state has monitored bacterial levels at this beach http://mass.digitalhealthdepartment.com/public_21/beaches.cfm) for many years. This public data shows that Sandy Cove was polluted only once in the last six years. This isolated instance was not due to pollution from Treat's Pond but to a wave of pollution emanating from sewage plant failures on the Merrimac. The truth is that Sandy Cove is very well flushed and is not significantly affected by Treat's Pond. Sandy Cove waters are safe for humans and, despite the misguided concerns of ACE, also for shellfish, which don't live there for their own private reasons.

When the pollution argument didn't hold up, the focus turned to the ecological value of converting the pond into a salt marsh. It is clear from old maps that the pond was at one time connected to the sea by a stream at Sandy Cove. Whether by storm or by man this outlet was blocked and the pond became landlocked. As noted by Peter Whittemore and Chris Evans, this event occurred before living memory and it has remained a freshwater pond, except perhaps after major sea storms. Sand has now filled in the old stream bed and the beach in this area has increased considerably. Homes formerly on stilts have now been replaced by homes on the beach, though some built in the 1970s on the flood plain were built on fill. These homes could not have been built if the pond were tidal. The question now is whether restoring tidal flow is desirable from an ecological point of view (and if so at what cost?) or prudent considering the development that has since taken place. Flushing the pond would help to clean it up, but the ACE plan would convert it into a piped aquarium of limited ecological value. Cohasset is blessed with hundreds of acres of real saltwater marshes in Little Harbor and the Gulf which fish can freely access without need of a 250yd pipe. Is it worth spending so much money to add a small pond that as discussed below might do more harm than good?

Lately, the focus has changed to storm-water remediation. This is an important concern that needs swift action but one which has still not been directly addressed. ACE stress that their project is for pond restoration and describe several important effects in Section 5 of the last information sheet of Jan. 4, 2008. All deal with perceived ecological and aesthetic benefits of creating a new salt marsh. Notably, not one word is mentioned of flood control — and for good reason. Nevertheless, some residents and the selectmen are now citing flood control as the main reason for "restoring" the pond. The argument here is that making Treats pond tidal will decrease flooding by increasing its capacity to store floodwaters. This would certainly be true at low tide. However, it's a very different story at high tide. Treat pond lies 3 feet above mean sea level, which is about 4.8 ft at Whitehead near Whale Meadow. With typical high tides of about 10 feet (see - http://tbone.biol.sc.edu/tide), ACE projects that water levels in the pond and its waterways will increase by about 2 ft and will flood areas around the pond that have not seen much, if any, sea water for many years.



More importantly for some homeowners in Sandy Cove, the increased water levels will create new and different flooding problems. At normal high tides the sea will overflow the access road that crosses the stream feeding Treat's Pond close to Atlantic Avenue. This point, marked with a star on the map, has a low point of less than 4 feet. From there, the sea will spill onto the grounds of several homes, including, ironically, Mr. Houghton's, which also lie only 4 feet above sea level. The areas likely to be affected by normal tides are enclosed by the inner contour. This map was derived with software from Google Earth (Google Earth, 42°14' N, 70°47'W). Considerably more flooding is to be expected at full moons when tides can be up to 2 ft higher for several days. This small increase in sea level will have profound effects on this flat low lying area. As indicated by the outer contour, several other homes that previously were not much affected by stormwater will now be inundated by corrosive sea water for several hours a day.

No doubt property owners will want to be compensated for any damage. Who should pay? Access will then be easier by canoe than by car. At this point, seas flowing from Treat Pond will come within 1 ft of overtopping the sand on Sandy Beach. When pushed by a storm or an on-shore wind the sea might easily cut a channel through the sand. In another irony, this might restore the original outlet to Sandy Cove. Free tidal flow into Treats from any route would therefore adversely affect many properties. Tide gates might help, but would add further artificiality to the "restoration" and would need to be manned day or night, fair weather or foul, for several days a month.

In conclusion, this project is still a work in progress and not ready for prime time. The selectmen have still to determine which properties will be taken by eminent domain and at what costs to the town. Rather than spending $1.7million to turn the clock back 100 years for an increasingly ill-defined project that seems likely to do more harm than good, the town would be better to work with the flood control system already in place at Sandy Cove, imperfect as it is. Access to this drain has recently been blocked by a locked gate. The town should do what's right for those that get flooded and legally enforce this deeded easement- with a Sherman tank if necessary. If residents continue to object to DPW trundling across the sand to keep this drain clear, they can easily clear the drain themselves in 2 minutes with a shovel. Alternatively, they might consider the previously discussed $4000 fix to extend the pipe. If this is unacceptable to them, they should be left to face the consequences of their actions. A staff member of Woods Hole Oceanic Institute who has read this article agrees with the above analysis and thinks "that transforming the fresh water pond to a salt water tidal pond is a very bad idea, especially when you also consider mean sea level rise." The selectmen's article to fund this pig in a poke should be soundly rejected at Town Meeting.

Jim Drysdale represents Cohasset in the South Shore Coastal Watershed Alliance and is a member of the Cohasset stormwater committee. His views may not represent those of other members.

Saltwater History of Treat's Pond

Section of Joshua Fisher's plat showing Sandy Cove above lot 9. (From Bigelow, Narrative History of Cohasset, 1898).

COMMENTARY

JACQUELINE DORMITZER

No longer regularly freshened by saltwater tidal flow, Treat's Pond has become a largely stagnant fresh water pond dominated by Phragmites.

In the March 7 Mariner, both Peter Whittemore and Chris Evans asserted that Treat's Pond was never a saltwater pond. According to Whittemore, "There is no historical record of Treat's Pond ever being salt water." And Evans stated, "The saline history of Treat's Pond is a diversionary myth that needs to be dismissed once and for all." Maybe they should actually read some Cohasset history.

In his Narrative History of Cohasset, E. Victor Bigelow discusses the 1647-48 division of Cohasset's salt meadows among Hingham property owners. Six of the salt meadow lots, totaling 11-1/2 acres, surrounded Sandy Cove (p. 137). At that time, Treat's Pond was not a separate body of water but formed the innermost portion of an inlet from the ocean and was, of course, saline. About 20 years later (1670) the surveyor Joshua Fisher remeasured all shares in the previous land division and divided the entire area of Cohasset, including the uplands (except for the Common), into lots for distribution. The Fisher plat of 1670 shows the inlet at Sandy Cove, above lot 9 at the lower right of the accompanying map.

The configuration of Sandy Cove gradually changed. Sand began to fill the inlet in the mid-1800s, leaving only a channel between what came to be called Treat's Pond and the ocean. But at high tide saltwater still flowed down through the channel, or "guzzle," into the pond, and at low tide pond water flowed back to the ocean. An article by Lucy Treat, included in my anthology of Cohasset history Savor of Salt, makes clear the connection between the pond and the cove: "A real voyage of childish adventure is to start from Sandy Cove in a small boat and row through a guzzle that leads from Sandy Cove into Treat's Pond. After cruising about the pond, one can row through a small canal that leads from Treat's Pond into Little Pond and is a survival of Mr. Doane's salt-making business" (p. 176).

By 1894, however, the separation of Treat's Pond from the ocean was complete, as you can see from the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey map found in Bigelow's Narrative History. Around 1882 a wooden channel had been installed to serve as a manmade "guzzle" from the pond. Fifty years later, the 1933 Town Report noted that the town replaced the "antiquated wooden system that has served for many years and which has been the cause of much trouble and complaint" with an "up-to-date drainage system consisting of iron and cement pipes, catch basin, and tide gate" at Treat's Pond. The purpose of the tide gate, of course, was to regulate the flow of ocean water into the pond. The system was again updated around 1960, this time with a pipe and a flapper valve that only allowed the pond to drain, as sand and seaweed from in-coming tides had clogged the previous pipe. The outfall of the current pipe is now buried under more than 5 feet of sand and must be dug out by backhoe to drain the pond.

No longer regularly freshened by saltwater tidal flow, Treat's Pond has become a largely stagnant fresh water pond dominated by Phragmites. Accreting sand has separated the pond from the ocean at Sandy Cove by about 1,000 feet. Nevertheless, according to a recent e-mail communication from a long-time neighbor of the pond, it can still be considered an "occasional salt marsh":

"Since I have lived here in the mid-1960s, there have been periods of very high salinity at Treat's and periods (such as now) of no or very low salinity. The 'occasional salt marsh' feature was caused by ocean flooding, which seemed to occur at fairly regular intervals. Storm water from the ocean would wash into Treat's Pond and turn it into a temporary saltwater body. Over time, the salinity would decrease until the next occasion of coastal flooding. These flooding dynamics have changed over time due to the following factors:

When the Bigelow [no relation to the historian] property was developed (around 1979/80), the driveway was raised, substantially blocking direct ocean water surge from entering Treat's across the historical flood plain. That development fundamentally changed the water dynamics in the neighborhood.

The beach front has changed, and that buildup seems to limit the frequency of ocean water storm surge over the top of the beach and into the field."

The historical record is clear: Treat's Pond was once saline. To assert the contrary is to ignore the evidence and mislead the public.

Jacqueline Dormitzer, for Friends of Treat's Pond

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

'Fresh water pond'

TO THE EDITOR:

As far as I can ascertain, Treats Pond is a fresh water pond. In fact, some of my children skated there in their youth with friends.

Referring to Bigelow's book of Cohasset page 13 – In the 19th century "the mud of an ancient bog on Sandy Cove is now exposed, showing that the sea has risen several feet since the bog was formed" the sea is still rising throwing the sand back on the land. A nor'easter further causes the flooding of homes and Atlantic Avenue.

I've read in the Mariner articles of a proposed Treat Pond "solution." I support the "box" at the southern end of Sandy Cove to help the drainage. When I was selectman chair several years ago, I went with the highway department to reset the area mentioned. The pipe was eventually cleared and though a larger pipe was suggested at the time nothing was done.

For these reasons and others it seems foolhardy to create a salt pond by an excessive piping plan which may or not be the solution or create more flooding in the process.

Q&A – Proposal for Housing Trust

Information session on affordable housing — The Cohasset Housing Partnership will conduct a public information session and discussion on affordable housing in Cohasset on Tuesday, March 25 at 7 p.m. at the Library.

Please join us to discuss the need for affordable housing, the approaches to developing affordable housing, our state-mandated compliance status, the articles proposed for this and next fall's Town Meetings, the myths and realities of affordable housing and any other questions or concerns you may have.

• What is the housing trust? The housing trust would be a new town agency, a vehicle and tool in executing both the Partnership's approved charge and a pro-active policy of developing new and maintain existing affordable housing in Cohasset.

• What is its functional advantage? The housing trust would be the functional equivalent of an enterprise fund dedicated solely to the development and maintenance of affordable housing. Like other such funds we have in Town, it would have a greater degree of flexibility to act when necessary (its true advantage when operating in the private sector real estate marketplace), but unlike these others it has a system of controls and checks & balances on major activities.

• From where did the idea come? Other communities are using housing trusts as an integral part of a pro-active affordable housing/40B strategy. The state has greatly assisted this effort by creating a trust mechanism by statute, which this article would adopt. Specifically, we are copying what Hingham passed last spring, including the added local control measures that Hingham put into its trust.

• What are the powers of the trust? The enumerated powers listed in the warrant article you will see are self-explanatory and come from the statute, and include all the tools necessary for the trust to perform its tasks. It is not however the goal of the trust to make the town a developer (see next question). Added is the ability to make grants and loans to preserve existing housing. Hingham is embarking on such a program. We think this is a very important tool for preservation of existing units. The Community Preservation Act has a similar capability, so this power is not unprecedented.

• What are the anticipated functions of the trust? The Partnership's operational plan is designed to assist the Town in meeting both its compliance with 40B and non-40B housing needs. We seek to develop enough units to close our anticipated 40B gap, by developing small scale, unobtrusive projects, both new and thru conversion of existing units. An example of the latter is the 2 units at 821 Jerusalem Road recently taken by tax title. While the focus of the trust is on 40B, our wider goal is to address not only that statute with which we must comply, but also to develop units at price points just above 40B limits. Our modus operandi is to look for the private development community to take the lead on ownership and development of projects, with the Partnership and trust simply acting as a facilitator, rather than putting the Town in the role as lead developer.

By being pro-active, we hope to best be able to be in a position to take advantage of available 40B moratoriums and/or control our destiny against unwanted or oversized 40B proposals.

We envision the trust to be primarily a funding and subsidy source for projects originating from the Partnership or private sector. The trust would also have the capability to secure available properties with short-term deposits or even short-term purchase. The trust could also engage in a loan or grant program. Eventually, it could also replace the Partnership, taking on not only a funding role, but a role as originator and facilitator of projects, and as implementer of the housing plan.

• What local controls are added to the trust? The Board of Selectmen (BOS) presently guides Partnership policies. It will have control over the trust by power of appointment of the seven trustees, at least one of whom must be a BOS member. The major financial powers of the trust, purchasing or disposing of real estate and borrowing, will require BOS approval. Finally, the trust will have to present to Town Meeting, for approval annually, an allocation plan, a general plan of how it intends to expend its funds, much as the CPC now does with its funds. The trust will also only be able to assist so-called "friendly 40B" projects — those that come via cooperation with the Town. Provisions are also added 1) to limit the trust's liability to trust assets, and so not make the Town liable for its debts, and 2) like the CPC, to have the trust be revisited, and either sunsetted or renewed, in five years.

• Why now? The Town is not at 40B compliance and will be slightly under compliance even with all known projects now in the pipeline, including Avalon. We thus remain at risk for a large, community-altering, undesired project and land is available for such a project. We need to be pro-active, by devising a proper Planned Production Plan and by having the tools necessary, like the trust and inclusionary zoning, with which to execute a pro-active policy.

What will be the sources of funds for the trust? The trust is empowered to receive funding from general appropriation of the town, gifts, loans and developers. We expect the primary sources of funding to be 1) transfer of the Community Preservation housing-dedicated funds and 2) developer buy-outs from the new inclusionary zoning bylaw (coming fall '08).

• What will be the interaction with CPC and its "affordable housing" obligation and are the boards duplicative? Given that the CPC has other functions and does not now affirmatively seek out affordable housing projects, we would hope it would simply transfer most if not all of its funds allocated for affordable housing to the trust, and defer project origination and management to agencies more singularly focused on housing, i.e. the trust and Partnership. Synergy rather than duplication of effort should be the result.

Treat's Pond article deserves support

COMMENTARY

ROBERT AND JENNIFER WILLMS

These were widely supported without regard to what group or neighborhood benefited.

In 2004 the townspeople of Cohasset participated in a comprehensive planning and goal setting process known as the Cohasset Master Plan. The plan sought to articulate and review the town's values and goals with the objective of conserving the character of the town, its open spaces, its environment, its heritage and its beauty. The character of the town is also revealed in the values expressed by the numerous and frequently unrecognized acts of generosity of individuals and organizations who have contributed their time, effort and resources unselfishly for the good of all. Cohasset's civic generosity as well as its natural assets are what make this town a most desirable place in which to live.

The townspeople have also, through their participation in town government and with their pocketbooks, sought to improve the lives of their fellow citizens irrespective of their address or presumed financial resources whenever and wherever possible. The projects undertaken by the town in the last few years have involved the schools, water resources, flood relief, environmental restoration, recreational facilities and open space preservation. These were widely supported without regard to what group or neighborhood benefitted.

Among the most significant have been Cohasset's environmental and flood control projects. For James Brook/Jacob's Meadow, the town has already spent $1.8 million for three culverts and a tide gate. It is also spending another $2 million to upgrade the sewer plant and another $1 million to reduce the infiltration and inflow to the plant during storm events. Simultaneously, an emergency bypass pipe is being completed this month that will, in addition to the above, completely eliminate the unacceptable failures of the plant that have plagued some residences on Elm St. The town has also applied for a $300,000 FEMA grant to improve flow through the tide gate and create an upstream detention basin. The Community Preservation Committee has recommended a grant of $89,000, matched by a CZM grant of $46,000, for rain gardens to clean and reduce flow into Ellms and Jacob's Meadows. As a community we support these and other ongoing efforts to eliminate flooding and pollution in James Brook and Jacob's Meadow.

The town, together with Hingham and Hull, is supporting a $2.4 million reconstruction of the tide gates at Strait's Pond, and a $65,000-plus matching grant for the replacement of the culvert at Border St. and Parker Ave. At last year's Town Meeting, the town also appropriated $1 million for flood control and drainage in the Little Harbor area and received in addition a $150,000 grant from the Mass DEP for storm water remediation there.

The town has been generous. It has supported these and many other projects without regard to address, location or apparent local resident financial resources.

There have been a lot of discussions, passion, and many interpretations (and misinterpretations) of the situation and the facts. The simple truth is that we have a rainwater flooding problem that the Town has an obligation to mitigate. We ask that you take this into consideration and support the restoration and flood control project for Treat's Pond at Town Meeting on March 29. The town has consistently supported environmental remediation and flood control projects, particularly those matched by grants from the state and federal governments. We are asking that you vote to approve Article 22 and to approve the investment by the town of $300,000 in order to obtain a $1.7 million solution and its significant benefits. We will continue to pursue a town solution to these significant flooding problems and the environmental issues associated with Treats Pond. If we do not proceed with this project now, we will lose significant outside funding. We feel the time is now and we hope you will agree with us. The Treat's Pond restoration and flood control project deserves your support.

Robert and Jennifer Willms for the Friends of Treat's Pond.

Question Of The Week

For Sewer Commission candidates: Those with septic systems often learn to be careful about what they put down the drain. Would it be beneficial to educate and or encourage sewer users not to give up their old septic system habits? And is there a future for "gray-water" gardens and other initiatives?

SEWER COMMISSION/ Wayne Sawchuk

When the expansion of the Little Harbor Sewer District is completed in about two years, about half of the town's dwellings will be served by public sewage disposal and the remaining half will continue to be served by individual septic systems.

Whether on septic systems or sewer systems there is a long list of items that should not be washed down the sink or flushed down the toilet:

- Diapers, whether cloth or disposable
- Chemicals, like paints, thinners, varnish, unwanted cooking oil, grease
- Cigarette butts, they are not biodegradable
- Coffee grounds
- Dirt, from washing out your flowerpots for example
- Drugs and medicines
- Kitty litter
- Paper towels
- Latex condoms and gloves
- Plastic gloves
- Sanitary napkins
- Dental floss
- Toys

These items should be disposed of properly and not washed down the drain. They can clog piping inside a house or cause problems with the grinder pumps being installed for individual homes in the new Little Harbor Sewer District.

Although the grinder pumps are designed to macerate most normal sewage flows, invariably, the heavy load put on the pumps can burn them out prematurely or cause them to siege and clog up during their frequent on and off cycles.

With the introduction of newer filters being installed in the outlets of septic and grey-water systems, the longevity of the absorption fields will be expanded when combined with annual pumping of septic tanks.

In terms of a future for "grey-water" gardens and other initiatives, I think that would require much more space than allotted here.

I have encountered many different causes of septic system and pump failures during the 20-year period I built and repaired septic and drainage systems in Cohasset and will apply some of the common sense solutions to solve Cohasset's wastewater issues.

SEWER COMMISSION/ Jim Dow

Residents that have had septic systems in the past have already been somewhat conditioned as to what they can and cannot dispose of through the drains. Educated sewer users are always better off than those that dispose of whatever they choose without thinking of the consequences. With the addition of the low-pressure grinder pumps to the sewer system, it will be particularly important to educate all residents to help them to understand what materials can be deposited into the system. The use of garbage disposals adds a significant risk to the grinder pump systems. The materials that are sent through them, even though they are ground up, still pose the threat of impairing the pumps ability to run by clogging the impeller.

The use of "gray-water" for gardening is not only a realistic idea, it is a very smart and conversation minded option. Recycling water to use in your garden would ultimately save money with minimal negative impact or effort. It would save money because you would be re-using the water you are already paying for. Secondly and just as important, the water used outside would not be going to the treatment plant, you would actually be minimizing the impact on the plant by not sending the water to be treated. If you have the ability to choose where the gray water comes from, use shower and bathtub water first because it will not contain the same types of grease and fats that the kitchen sink or dishwasher water may have. You have to be careful about using the gray water because it will often contain hair, soaps and detergents although it can be used with minimal treatment. This water can be extracted by using a siphon and draining it into a bucket or removing the trap under the drain.

For Selectman candidates: What "grade" would you give Selectmen on their handling of the Treat's Pond issue so far, and where do you stand on the Treat's Pond issue?

SELECTMAN/ Fred Koed

Incomplete. Storm water management remains a serious town-wide problem that needs town-wide prioritization. Selectmen get a continual flow of hot button issues. We're like a reluctant traffic cop trying to move projects through the congested intersection of competing and conflicting public interests.

We win some and we lose some. The new sewer project around Little Harbor and sections of Atlantic Avenue should help the water quality along our coast. The Town owes a debt of gratitude to Sewer, Conservation, Water, town engineering & highway for working together to solve many drainage issues in conjunction with that new project.

Now we need to solve the issues of James Brook flooding, especially around the sewer treatment plant. I expect engineering will confirm the wisdom of a retention pond somewhere upstream between Sohier Street and the Bird Sanctuary Pond. Releasing water gradually through downtown, under the Greenbush ROW, through James Meadow, and out the Self-Regulating Tide gate into the harbor will help minimize flooding.

The Treat's Pond article started as a citizen's petition and was converted to a selectmen's article. Because of the possibility of federal & state grants and what I feel is an obligation to hear out any neighborhood on their local problems, I did support placing the article on the warrant. As the owner of a conservation restriction on the pond, Cohasset does have a responsibility to find the most cost effective way to improve flow.

I am opposed to any new outfall into Cohasset Harbor. Along with the lobstermen and others, I'm seriously concerned about any outfall in proximity to the lobster in the lobster carts. Other reasons are too numerous to mention, except I'll just say Cohasset Harbor is in serious jeopardy, as evidenced by the strange corrosion and very limited life of boat mooring block chains underwater.

SELECTMAN/ Karen Quigley

My most valued friends are those who tell me the truth especially when I don't want to hear it. In this spirit, I suggest if the Selectmen do extra credit work between now and Town Meeting they can bump up their grade.

Since the merits of the project have been debated publicly, there is no need to reiterate them here. In my estimation, the project will neither meet the environmental goal of "restoration" nor successfully address stormwater flooding and is a financial boondoggle.

We are now actively engaged in preparing a Stormwater Flooding Master Plan for which the town appropriated $80,000. The purpose of this strategic town-wide study is to understand the extent of stormwater flooding, to set priorities and to make recommendations.

Thus, the issue is not if the Atlantic Avenue neighborhood should be included, but why they should receive priority when their flooding is neither greater nor more urgent than that in other neighborhoods.

Proponents argue they have secured the golden carrot: $1.1-million in federal funding. This funding is for "restoration" not flooding, and comes with a 35 percent non-federal match ($600,000). Taxpayers are being asked to commit to this as yet unengineered project in the hope the state provides some of the match and to trust the cost has not been underestimated.

The last time Town Meeting was told "act now or lose out" was the ill-fated town-sponsored development of the Cook Estate. Haste made waste then — $600,000 worth.

I've done my homework; the Treat's Pond article is a blank check, environmental and financial, that should not be signed.

For Planning Board candidates: The Planning Board has to balance the rights of an individual property owner to build what he/she wants and the presumed rights of the community at large. Drainage and stormwater runoff are examples. As a Planning Board member, how do you plan to balance those rights?

PLANNING BOARD/Clark Brewer

This is a great question. The planning board needs to find the balance between individual and community rights. An example of this balance is the Cohasset common. Many agree that the common is a charming and useful space created by both public and private interests. However, you cannot paint your house blue. Most agree though, this is fair and the historic district is worthy of protection and preservation.

Individuals and businesses need both basic and creative solutions to the problems they have of space requirements, visibility and creating value, both for themselves and the community. Individual property owners that are responsible, knowledgeable and conservative should be able to do what they want, as long as they don't negatively impact others. Before zoning, people built smaller houses and buildings that minimized the impact on others. For Cohasset, this practical approach, meant businesses were clustered in areas of the most activity, large houses were built on solid ground, ship captains homes were built close to the ocean but at a safe distance and fisherman cottages at the waters edge were small to minimize their owners loss from storms damage.

There is a responsibility to balance what members think individually, what may seem best for the community and what is reasonable to ask of individuals. In order to have a sense for this, it is important to find out what people think, have open discussions, participate in public meetings, research, understand successes or failures of similar communities and be able to think clearly about both short and long term goals.

My plan is to treat applicants with respect, understand the facts of each application, consider the perspective of neighbors, the neighborhood or the Town and make recommendations or decisions that are carefully considered.

PLANNING BOARD/ Charles Samuelson

A property owner who desires to undertake a building project must apply for a permit with the Building Inspector. The Building Inspector evaluates the proposed project for compliance with the Zoning Bylaws. If a permit is denied, the property owner may appeal to the Zoning Board of Appeals. As part of the appeals process the Planning Board is required to submit a written recommendation based on their interpretation of the Zoning Bylaws. The Zoning Board of Appeals is not required to accept or agree with this recommendation. If the Zoning Board of Appeals declines to issue a Special Permit or Variance, the property owner can take the case to either Land Court or Superior Court or to propose a change to the Zoning Bylaws. In any case, the proposed project is evaluated against the Zoning Bylaws. It is intended that there be no subjectivity in the Planning Board's evaluation and recommendation. The Planning Board must follow the Zoning Bylaws. Thus, in a way, the question is moot.

The process for changes to the Zoning Bylaws is managed by the Planning Board. The Planning Board conducts hearings and submits amendments along with its recommendation at Town Meetings. The Town votes to accept or reject each amendment. Thus the ultimate standard for evaluating a land owner's rights and restrictions (the Zoning Bylaws) are created by the Town, not the Planning Board.

To address the specific issue of storm water drainage, the current proposal is not before the Town Meeting as an amendment to the Zoning Bylaws. The proposal is for the Conservation Commission to manage storm water drainage permit process, not the Planning Board.

For School Committee candidate: Are the schools the right place to tackle substance abuse among teens and how bad is the alcohol-drug problem at the middle-high school?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Alfred Slanetz

Alcohol and substance abuse destroys lives. Developing a healthy lifestyle starts at home. While parents have the principle responsibility for instilling character and helping their children develop a healthy lifestyle, the school can serve an important role through health education and teacher-led group discussion. Particularly as students go through those difficult teenage years when they feel invincible and everything mom or dad says is wrong, peer group discussion at school can be invaluable to internalize healthy life skills in each of our children.

The school has a zero tolerance policy to alcohol/drugs on school property/events. The school enforces this policy through its faculty and chaperones. Off campus, police provide enforcement.

The alcohol/drug problem at the Middle-High School is comparable to other suburban schools. There is more alcohol than drug use. The heavy drinking that does occur is primarily at parties in a limited number of homes in town. All it takes are one or two parents in a grade to facilitate teenage drinking at their house and more damage is done to that peer group than anything the school can control. It is the parents who condone these parties who bear the primary responsibility for any drinking or drug problem in town. The police have and will continue to deal with them. Parents should also do what they can to ostracize such parents from our community.

Alcohol and drugs are, unfortunately, a part of the world. While it may be appropriate for parents to introduce their own children to alcohol in moderation (e.g.- a glass of wine with dinner), facilitating heavy drinking for their own and other peoples' children certainly is not appropriate and is illegal. The parents and community have the principle role in tackling substance abuse. Teaching our children healthy life skills is part of a parent-school partnership.

Next Week's Question

For School Committee candidate: How important is the METCO program to Cohasset and is it time to revisit Cohasset's participation in light of budget restraints?

For Selectman candidates: "See you in court!" could be the mantra for Cohasset. Can the selectmen do more to control the town's legal costs?

For Sewer Commission candidates: How viable is the option of sending more Cohasset sewerage to Hull and could that be a cost-effective alternative for some Cohasset homes with failing septic systems?

For Planning Board candidates: Cedarmere could best be described as a "sleeping giant." Where does that project stand and what control could the Planning Board exercise over its future development?

Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Tuesday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)

Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Tuesday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers, short position statements and the like.

All candidates, opposed or unopposed, may submit a photograph and formal announcement.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

Election supper is April 3

The Annual Election Supper, a springtime tradition, will be held at the Beechwood Congregational Church on Church Street. Candidates and voters are invited to get together for dinner on Thursday evening, April 3, at 6:30. Dinner will include roast pork, roast potatoes, carrots, Harvard beets, dessert as well as beverages. Before dinner, all candidates will be introduced. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children. Reserve your tickets by calling 781-383-1298.

HEALTH NOTES

Treat's Pond choice is up to you

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This week I had a casual conversation with a civilian who works for the Army Corps of Engineers. He is a geologist who, among other things, is studying cleanup of trace contaminants in Wompatuck Park. Our discussion touched on budgets and he said that his part of the Corps has had a larger budget this year to cover congressional earmarks authorized by the present administration. He jokingly talked about "dredging harbors to accommodate congressmen's yachts" and such. Obviously, if a listener puts such remarks in the context of Cohasset's experience with the Corps, it suggests a deeper look at the funds which Cohasset is considering in relation to the restoration of Treats Pond to a saltmarsh which some claim it to have been until the late 1850's.

My understanding of the Treat's Pond controversy is as follows:

No one now possesses sufficient real engineering data to determine the best and cheapest means for solving the flooding from stormwater of the Northeast side of Atlantic Avenue of which Treats Pond is a part.

After heavy rain events, both sides of Atlantic Avenue are flooded with stormwater which present drainage is inadequate to relieve before unhealthy flooding occurs in several occupied dwellings along Atlantic Avenue.

...Allocate the money to much needed restoration of saltmarshes in Quincy near ongoing developments, or to restore Treats Pond.

Having read the Mariner, my understanding of the Army Corps involvement in Treats Pond is that they have proposed three solutions to the use of Treats Pond to alleviate flooding.

1. Rebuild the existing drain from Treats to Sandy Cove by increasing its diameter to accept the added stormwater entering Treats during a heavy rain event. And, since the invert (output pipe) into the present catchbasin is buried between 6 and 10 feet below the surface of the beach at its location in Sandy Cove, extend the outfall into Sandy Cove by some distance estimated to be in the hundreds of feet. This solution, the Corps is unwilling to consider because the bottom at the outfall location is unstable and subject to filling and erosion of unknown amount and rate, since no good technical data exists.

2. and 3. are to: construct a pipe to an existing outfall at the intersection of Atlantic and Margin Street; or: Lay a pipe overland to an existing drain in Whale Meadow.

Now to the Army Corps funding. It is my understanding that Congressman Delahunt has considerable control over the million or so dollars earmarked for Massachusetts, and that he is under pressure both to either: Allocate the money to much needed restoration of saltmarshes in Quincy near ongoing developments, or to restore Treats Pond.

Of course, the sensible solution would be to include in the Stormwater/Drainage master plan provisions to determine the best, most cost effective Treats Pond solution using a part, maybe $50,000 of the earmark benevolence to obtain sufficient data to make an optimum decision and give Quincy their share of the balance.

But, it's really up to you. Time is getting late and soon you'll vote on the Treats Pond issue. If enough people believe that we should try to get the Army Engineers to help with the solution to our stormwater problem by trying to obtain earmark funding from the government then Warrant Article No 22 will pass. If they don't we will have to find other ways to fund the Stormwater Remediation plan already paid for.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Close group built success this season

Hockey team wins 13 games during 2007-08 season

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Tight knit.

That's probably the easiest way to describe how close the Cohasset High hockey team was during the 2007-08 season.

It also describes how this group remains.

Skippers coach Bob Walsh grew particularly fond to this senior class, his second to graduate under his tenure. The team expanded his systems and coaching philosophies in year two and won 13 games.

The Skippers earned a No. 8 seed in the Div. 3 South sectional, losing to Westwood, 2-0. That game, a very even match, could have gone either way, give or take a few bounces.

The win propelled Westwood into the sectional final where it was finally dispatched by Scituate, 5-3.

"It's nice in one respect to lose to a team that kept winning," Walsh said. "We played them tight. It shows a lot about the character of this team."

Had the Skippers skated by Westwood they had the potential to make a serious run in the bracket.

"Our feeling was if we got by Westwood we could have a pretty good tourney," Walsh said. "They were a very similar type of team. We both had the first game jitters. After shaking hands with Mike (Welby) I said, "go all the way to the top.'"

Losing left a bad taste in the Skippers mouths.

"There was a lot of disappointment," Walsh said. "The consensus from the guys I talked to was it was a great season, they had a good time and enjoyed the workouts. It was emotional, that last game, because I have such a good relationship with these seniors."

Walsh admitted that he was closer with this senior class than last because they spent two full seasons together. "Watching them graduate," he said, "is like seeing my own sons going off to college."

The seniors, Frank Wheelwright, R.K. Quebec, Chaz Czerkawski, Alex Goetz and Pat Doonan, along with coach Walsh, grabbed breakfast during the season at Morrell's in Abington or Butterfields in Rockland.

Talking penalty kills over Eggs Benedict created a special bond with this group.

"We try and go twice a month just as a bunch of guys," Walsh said.

Walsh wants to continue to build a pro-

Varsity outlook boys

The Skippers, under head coach Stew Curran, are the defending two-time Division III state champions. It will be hard to match the drama of last year's State championship game against Scituate, but the 2008 squad will be looking to improve on last year's 16-3 record and threepeat as State champions.

Anthony Roman, formerly a goalie at Guilford College and currently a graduate student at B.U, will coach the JV. Gene Binda (former standout at Salve Regina College) will return as an additional assistant coach.

Although the boys lost some key players to graduation, including All-American attackman and playmaker Mike Bunstein and standout defenseman Jeff Brown (Denver University), the team should be very strong again. Cohasset will be dynamic in the offensive zone and should put the ball in the back of the cage often.

The 2008 squad will be led by its attack which returns two starters from an attack line which most observers believed was the best in the state last year. The "Summer Street" connection of senior co-captains Mark Flibotte and Mike Grimm, should once again lead the scoring parade for the Skippers.

Flibotte (bound for Bowdoin College next Fall) earned All American, All Scholastic and South Shore all-star honors in 2007, leading the Skippers in scoring with over 100 points. He should put up big numbers again and challenge Cohasset's all-time scoring record.

Grimm (headed to the University of Pennsylvania) contributed over 90 points in 2007 while earning All Scholastic and South Shore all-star honors. Grimm will again break down opposing defenses with his explosive dodging, quickness and rocket release and should be a legitimate All American candidate this year.

There will be significant competition for the remaining attack slots, particularly since both Grimm and Flibotte will likely see some time in the midfield. Senior attackers Chris Mills and Matt Burgess, juniors, Gordon Smith, Matt Wassell and Johnny Wade, and sophomores, Will Wise and Dean Driscoll, should be in the mix and provide still more scoring punch to a very potent offense.

Cohasset's offensive focus will continue at the midfield where senior co-captain Chuck Czerkawski (South Shore all-star), and seniors PJ McCaw and Peter Ernst, will lead. Czerkawski (headed to Connecticut College) and McCaw should dominate the face-off circle and give the Skippers the all important possessions throughout the year. Ball control will be critical to Cohasset's ultimate success. Both Czerkawski and McCaw have strong shots and will put very tough, physical defensive pressure on the opponent's top offensive midfielders.

Ernst should provide quickness in the transition game as well as help win the ground ball battles in the middle of the field. Senior Greg Gallagher and juniors Andrew DiPaulo, Andrew Smith, Owen Landon, Alex Livingstone and Charlie Mushin will also carry a substantial load at midfield. From the indoor season, it looks like a number of other sophomores and freshman may also be ready to make a contribution.

The Cohasset defense was hard hit by graduation returning only the "big man," senior Jake Cuneo from the top six long poles of 2007. However, Cuneo will be a formidable object in the middle of the Skipper defense. Due to relative inexperience in the defensive end, Cohasset may employ varied defenses more often this year. Juniors Vin Curran and Anderson Lynner, along with two stout footballers, senior Cliff Musto and sophomore Nick Lieberman, will be counted on to step up.

If they come together as a group, opposing offenses will find it very difficult to get good shooting opportunities. Given Cohasset's size and aggressive defensive style, staying out of the penalty box will be key. Senior co-captain Nate Porter will again man the goal in 2008 and look to continue his outstanding play from last year. Porter is a seasoned net minder and positions himself well in the goal and is very smart with his passing in the clearing game. He worked hard in the off-season and will need to coordinate the young and inexperienced defense in front of him for Cohasset to repeat as State champions.

The boys open the regular season at home on Wednesday, April 1 against Catholic Memorial. The schedule is a tough one with games against several very strong programs including Duxbury, Hingham, Marshfield, Tabor Academy and archrival Scituate. The boys will also play in the first ever Seacoast Cup at Scituate High on April 17 and 19.

Varsity outlook girls

While the boys were winning their second-straight state title in 2007, the girls finished a season that started with title hopes of their own, but ended with them out of the playoffs.

That disappointment will serve as a huge motivating factor for this year's squad. Returning to the playoffs and building for the future will be key goals for coach Chuck Jaffe. Two-thirds of the starting line-up will be new this season, which promises tremendous competition for playing time among a group of aggressive underclassmen.

Midfield should be a strength in 2008, where junior Caitlin Mahoney and sophomore Amy Meikleham both earned all-league honors a year ago. Isabelle Franklin – who started a handful of games as a freshman – will fill one of the vacant slots, with the final two jobs up for grabs. Expect senior Jen Silvia, juniors Madeline Leahy, Katelyn Ryan and Grace Clougherty, and freshman Kaci Kucinski to be in the mix.

Kucinski is the second-leading girls scorer in the history of the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program. Ryan, Silvia or junior Amanda Masotta are all in line to be the potential defensive stopper at the midfield. Jaffe and returning JV coach Jennifer Palmer are excited about the team's depth at midfield because several young players – sophomores Samantha Crough, Lucy Noble, Chelsea Silvia and freshmen Caroline Fein and Olivia Murphy – all have the potential to work their way into a varsity job.

The team graduated all of its starters at attack, so there will be a new look up front in 2008. Expect Lindsay Hill, a fast, left-handed player who has started on defense for every game of her high school career, to compete up front this year, along with classmates Kayla Farren and Katie Gaumer.

Gaumer potted over 40 goals for the JV team during the last two years which should translate into production at the varsity level this year. Sophomore Kaleigh Teague earned a varsity letter as a freshman and classmate Hannah Burgess has high-grade skills as well. Freshman Kelsey Erler is an exciting, high-motor player with the ability to be a factor right away.

On defense, expect Senior Captain Sarah Brown to lead the way, along with sophomore Mimi Mahoney who earned a starting role halfway through her freshman campaign. Senior Amanda Hurd, sophomore Megan Richardson and freshman Eliza Kinnealey most likely will battle it out for playing time in the defensive zone. Goaltending will be the biggest concern. The squad enters the season without a seasoned keeper on the roster. The development of a goaltender – or the lack of one – is likely to be the biggest factor in the team's ability to succeed this season.

Carolyn Crimmins will join Jaffe and Palmer as a part-time coach this season. She's an 8th-grade English teacher in the Cohasset school system, whose presence will allow the team to work in smaller groups, focusing on skill development, so that the team will be able to build on whatever it can accomplish this year and compete for a title when it returns an experienced squad in 2009.

The girls are scheduled to open their regular season on the road at Bishop Feehan High School, and will start their home season Saturday, April 5 against Nantucket.

The youth program

Under the able leadership of Kirk Bukowski (Boys) and Joe Fitzgerald (Girls), Cohasset Youth Lacrosse celebrates its thirteenth season in 2008. The program continues to grow and lacrosse sticks in the hands of grade school boys and girls have become a sure sign of spring in Cohasset. Cohasset will have approximately 13 teams supported by the efforts of many committed parents/coaches. We will also run a 1st and 2nd grade clinic to introduce the game in a fun way at an early age.

Cohasset boys participate in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League and the girls play in the South Shore Lacrosse League. Cohasset has one of the most active youth programs in New England. The program has been successful on the field, consistently compiling impressive records while remaining true to its guiding philosophy of developing good sportsmanship, discipline, and fundamental lacrosse skills while at the same time providing equal playing time and fun for all participants.

Alumni

Another sure sign of the Cohasset Lacrosse Program's success is the number of our recent high school players who now play at the college level – Crandon Leahy (Quinnipiac), Jake Previte and Lauren Rizzotti (St. Michael's); Haley Haracz (Purdue club); Ashley Faber (Connecticut College); Jeff Brown (Denver); Jon Grimm and Sam Steele (Northeastern club); Tessa Leahy (Fitchburg State); Peter Kovach (U Mass-Boston); Bobby Meikleham (Bentley); Ryan Kucinski (Babson); Nick Murphy (Wentworth), Lisa Spirito (UConn club); Jessica Wheelwright (Gordon College); Leo Clougherty (St. Leo's) and Nick Spirito (Western Connecticut) – to name a few. Ronan Buick is coaching and playing down under for Melbourne, Australia's oldest lacrosse club. Garrett Curran (a Cohasset youth alumni) earned Preseason All-American honors and is in his fourth year as a starting goalie for fourth ranked Lynchburg College.

Help Cohasset Boosters keep the spirit growing

The Boosters' mission is to promote and grow the sport of lacrosse in Cohasset. We'll be active all spring with events, supporting our coaches, purchasing new equipment, providing support for off-season competition and publicizing our players/teams. You can stay informed about our activities, game schedules and our teams' successes at our web site – www.cohassetlacrosse.com.

The Boosters will host the lacrosse kickoff dinners at the Cohasset Lightkeepers on March 25 (boys) and March 26 (girls). We're planning a start of season Lacrosse Spirit Day on April 5. We will also host a youth jamboree for both girls and boys on June 14 and 15. Our alumni will return for our Eighth Annual Alumni Game. There's a lot happening, and we need your involvement. Whether you can contribute financially or as a volunteer, your support means a lot. Don't hesitate to contact us if you'd like to be involved. Thanks for your help.

Flibotte has all-star season

Groton School junior captain, Gabby Flibotte, had an all-star season for the Lady Zebras. Flibotte, a native of Cohasset, led the Groton school in points, averaging 13 points per game.

In addition, Gabby led the team in steals, averaging 3.5 steals per game. She collected five rebounds per game. Flibotte was selected to play in the Class A/Class B New England Prep School Athletic Conference all-star game.

She was also a unanimous selection to the first team All-Independent School League.

"Gabby is a tremendous competitor," said Groton coach Susan Wynn. "We play a very tough schedule and Gabby's leadership and desire to win carried us to the semifinals of the Class B tournament."

Groton finished the season 15-7 and advanced to the semifinal round of the New England Prep School tournament before falling to eventual champions Suffield Academy.

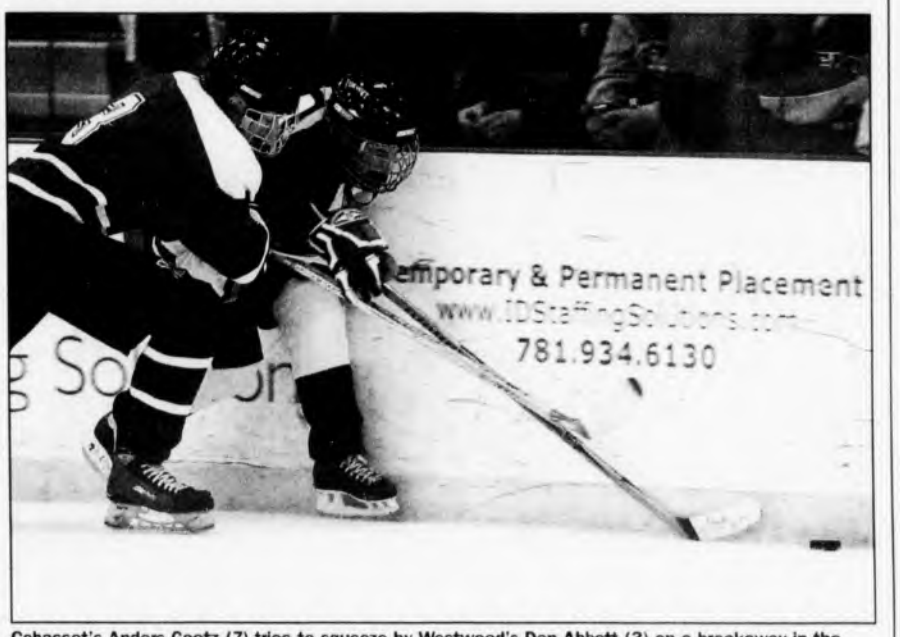
gram. His ongoing relationship with last year's seniors has set the precedent for staying in touch with this group.



"As a program we want to do better and better each year," Walsh said. "Last year we were the 17th seed and this year we were top 10."

Wheelwright, Doonan, Czerkawski and Jonny Wade were all named to the South Shore League all-star team. Although a strong core will graduate, Walsh and Co. is hard at work getting ready for next season.

Cohasset's Anders Goetz (7) tries to squeeze by Westwood's Dan Abbott (3) on a breakaway in the second period of their playoff game.

Wheelwright, Doonan, Czerkawski and Jonny Wade were all named to the South Shore League all-star team. Although a strong core will graduate, Walsh and Co. is hard at work getting ready for next season.

"It's going to be difficult to lose guys," Walsh said. "Czerkawski, he is one of the best centers around. Doonan can put the puck in the net. Wheelwright was the leader on defense, Goetz had serious peed. There are a lot of components to replace it will be difficult."

Although it won't be easy to get back to the tournament, Walsh has plenty of time to get his charges ready for next year.

"We are already talking about next season and working on player evaluations," he said. "What people did and what they need to do for next year—we will have a lot more speed but not as physical a presence."

Register to Ride in the 29th Annual Pan-Massachusetts Challenge

Online registration for the 29th Annual Pan-Massachusetts Challenge opened Tuesday, Jan. 15, at 9 a.m. Riders can register by logging on to www.pmc.org. Open to 5,500 cyclists, the Pan-Massachusetts Challenge will be held Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 2 and 3. This year's goal is to raise $34 million for the Jimmy Fund, which supports cancer research and treatment at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. To date, the Pan-Massachusetts Challenge has raised more than $204 million for the world-renowned cancer center.

Minimum fundraising requirements range from $1,300 to $4,000, depending upon the route chosen. There is a $170 registration fee. Support services, meals, and overnight accommodations will be provided. For information, or to register, visit www.pmc.org, or call (800) WE-CYCLE.

A worthy challenge for the fleet of foot

Qualified runners are invited to join a winning Boston Marathon team

BOSTON - Training for the Boston Marathon certainly provides runners with health benefits. Some even run fast enough to help improve the health of others.

The Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge (DFMC) team is looking for qualified runners who want to add a new dimension to their training by running for others as well as themselves. Runners who have run a qualifying time at a certified marathon after Sept. 23, 2006, can join the DFMC team and run to raise money that supports researchers at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston. These researchers have taken on another type of challenge: curing cancer.

Each challenge runner agrees to raise at least $3,000 by May 21, a sum that is easier to raise than most think. The average amount raised per runner in 2007 was more than $7,000 and 100 percent of the money goes to the Claudia Adams Barr Program in Innovative Basic Cancer Research at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Research done by Barr Investigators addresses many types of cancer affecting people of all ages and translates to increased cure rates, improved quality of life and hopefully, one day, a world without cancer.

The Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge provides participants with unparalleled support services. The training program is led by 1976 Boston Marathon winner Jack Fultz. There is an extensive calendar of group training runs and social gatherings as well as special access to leading health and fitness facilities throughout the Boston area. Race day, DFMC runners enjoy exclusive use of an indoor facility in Hopkinton on marathon morning, and a post-marathon recovery zone. Runners on the DFMC team roster also enjoy a unique camaraderie that results from working toward a common cause.

Dana-Farber runners receive commemorative DFMC apparel and race singlets. The distinctive singlets let the huge crowds lining the course know of the runners' extra dedication, ensuring that DFMC teammates receive heartfelt cheers as they run by. Nowhere is the cheering louder than in Kenmore Square where Dana-Farber patients, families and friends gather to give the DFMC runners a boost for the final mile. Most DFMC participants dedicate their run to someone in their life who has battled cancer.

Qualified runners have helped the DFMC enjoy tremendous growth and success since the program began in 1990. The DFMC has raised more than $34 million in the 18 years of the program. The goal of the 2008 Marathon Challenge is to raise $4.5 million for the Barr Program.

Interested qualified runners are encouraged to apply at www.RunDFMC.org as soon as possible in order to take advantage of the program's benefits. Contact the DFMC office at 617-632-1970 (toll-free 800-551-7036) or e-mail dfmc@dfci.harvard.edu for assistance.

CYBSA draft

The Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association (CYBSA) will hold its roster selection draft Thursday, April 3 at 7:00 p.m. in the Cohasset Middle-High School Library. The purpose of the draft is to allocate players to teams in all Baseball and Softball divisions with the exception of the Major League Baseball Division. Teams in the Major League Baseball division have already been selected.

Leagues included in the draft are: Farm League baseball, Instructional softball, National League baseball & softball, American League baseball & softball, Major League softball and Junior League baseball & softball.

The CYBSA is always looking for coaches. If you are interested in coaching in any of these divisions, please plan on attending the draft.

Little League requires background checks (CORI) on all league volunteers to ensure the safety of the children entrusted to our care. Please bring a photocopy of your license to the draft where you will be asked to fill out the necessary forms. Individuals, however well intentioned, not complying will not be allowed to coach.

If you have any questions about the draft or CORI requirements please contact Erik Golz at (617) 230-2559.

2008 SSBC Summer Baseball Camps schedule announced

The South Shore Baseball Club has announced its 2008 summer camps schedule for one week in Braintree and Cohasset, as well as four weeks in Hingham.

"Braintree, Cohasset and Hingham are all great baseball towns and we really enjoy having our camps there each summer," SSBC president/director Frank Niles Jr. said. "All of our campers will enjoy a valuable and rewarding experience at any of these SSBC summer camps. Our professional staff of qualified instructors will help kids improve their skills and enjoy the great game of baseball at the same time."

All campers are grouped according to age, ability, physical maturity and previous experience. Instructions will range from basic fundamentals to advanced skills. Each will play a minimum of one game per day.

Individual attention will be emphasized in all aspects of baseball. Pitching, catching, defense, base running and hitting will be featured in special sessions and lectures. Any camper needing specific areas of improvement will receive special attention from SSBC's expert staff of qualified professional coaches.

The Cohasset camp for youngsters 5-12 will be held Monday, June 23, through Friday, June 27, at Milliken Field.

The Braintree camp returns Monday, July 7, through Friday, July 11, at Watson Park for campers 5 through 15.

The annual Hingham Summer Baseball Camp, offering four one-week sessions for players 5 to 15, is scheduled Monday, July 14, through Friday, Aug. 8, at Hingham High School.

Sessions at all three camps will be held Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. through 2:30 p.m. Half-day sessions also will be available for 5 through 7 year olds from 8:30 a.m. through 11:30 a.m. None of the camps are restricted to the host towns and SSBC members and non-members alike are welcomed.

Other upcoming SSBC activities:

Mr. Skipper hopefuls strutted their stuff

LIFE AT CHS

CHRISTINE KENT

Great job to all the contestants...clearly "fear is not a factor" for you guys!

Last Friday, the coveted Mr. Skipper pageant took place in front of jam pack auditorium. Backstage, the 11 contestants waited anxiously for their time to strut their stuff and charm the crowd, while wearing oh-so spiffy tuxes. The stunning array of Skipper hopefuls included seniors Matt Blaze, Jake Cuneo, Pat Doonan, Tyler Kelly, Mike Kusek, Eric MacCarthy, Conor Michaud, Cliff Musto, and Kyle Pinkus. Not to be outdone by the upperclassmen, sophomore Ian Porter and bold freshman Matt Brooks partook in the entertaining festivity. With the comedic assistance of announcer Mr. Rolfe, the talented men of CHS sang, danced, strummed and drummed their way into their audience's hearts (but most importantly, the judges')! However, there could only be one victor. Maybe it was the early luck of the Irish (possibly) or his OUTSTANDING drumming skills that helped crown Mr. Skipper winner, Conor Michaud! Great job to all the contestants...clearly "fear is not a factor" for you guys!

While others basked in the spotlight (literally) on stage, the following students can enjoy recognition for their literary excellence after being published in the esteemed Teen Ink Magazine and Teen Ink Poetry Journal. Published in the latest issues were seniors, Oliver Brennan, Sam Burgoon, Evan Deutsch, Abby Foley, Sondra Hart, Mike Kusek, Sally Meehan, Grace Steel and Jenna Van Etten. Congratulations!

The past weeks were not all about competition and gaining recognition amongst parents and peers but did include the odd scholastic endeavor! For instance, the French department indulged in a fun field trip or "Fête de la Francophone" at Milton High School on Tuesday. Headed by French teachers, Ms. Marat and Mr. Kotter, 11 French students participated in this French Consulate sponsored event.... that's how you know it meant business!

Enough discussion of the entertaining and academic ongoings of CHS! It's time now for the rundown of the week!

- Monday, March 17th: The flood of green apparel for Saint Patrick's Day did not stop spring sports from starting!

Tuesday, March 18th: Papa Gino's Night! Hungry attendees stopped by the pizzeria to purchase a dinner in support of the Cohasset Music Department.

Wednesday, March 19th: The basketball players traded in their high tops for dress shoes before attending the Basketball Banquet at the Atlantica Restaurant.

Thursday, March 20th: The Yearbook met for a crucial meeting before their incoming deadline.

Friday: NO SCHOOL! Good Friday!

Well, that's it for me this week! Have a fun and safe weekend.

Christine Kent is a senior at CHS. Her column appears weekly in the Mariner..

Philly's got 'Frida' fever

Fran Golden
GATEHOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Philadelphia -

You know you're in an art-appreciating place when both a bellhop and a store clerk ask if you've been to see "Frida."

Yes, there are art lovers in the City of Brotherly Love, and the buzz right now is "Frida Kahlo,"an exhibition of the Mexican artist's work, having its only East Coast showing at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, through May 18.

"Throw a stone here and you'll hit an artist,"joked photographer Genevieve Coutroubis, director of the Regional Community Arts Program for The Center for Emerging Visual Artists, who said many artists have come here to live, attracted by community support.

The Philadelphia art-scape includes nearly 3,000 colorful murals painted on buildings around the city - part of a public/private effort that started as an anti-graffiti program - as well as numerous other examples of public art, galleries, art schools, museums and exhibition spaces.

Into this scene comes "Frida"with shops, hotels and restaurants getting into the act - "Frida Kahlo"banners even line Broad Street, the city's Avenue of the Arts.

Kahlo (1907-1954) is best known for painting iconic self-portraits, complete with unibrow and mustache, and several are on display in the exhibition (some never before seen in public). But there are also jolting allegorical works and still lifes, 42 paintings in all - a small show but one of big impact.

The self-portrait "Me and My Parrots" (1941) is on display in public for the first time at the "Frida Kahlo" show at the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

Kahlo - also the subject of the 2002 movie starring Salma Hayek - was a sad soul, tormented by her own health and back problems resulting from a near-fatal bus accident; by her unfaithful husband, the great muralist Diego Rivera (whose lovers included Kahlo's younger sister); and by her inability to have children. And all this is depicted in her art - including a particularly gruesome depiction of miscarriage, "Henry Ford Hospital."

Accompanying the paintings are more than 100 photos from Kahlo's private collection - including photos of Kahlo's own lovers, sculptor Isamu Noguchi and Bolshevik revolutionary Leon Trotsky. Many have personal notations.

Take the free audio tour to learn more details about the artist's life and fascinating interpretations of her work.

The show debuted at the Walker Center in Minneapolis, and when it leaves Philadelphia, it heads to the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

My personal favorite Kahlo work on display is called "My Dress Hangs There,"which depicts all the artist found wrong with American values when she and Rivera lived in New York in 1933, while he was painting murals at Rockefeller Center.

Given her pro-communism stance, it is ironic that the exhibit shop is packed with Frida souvenirs, including paper dolls complete with clothes, Frida and Diego candle sets and handbags decorated with Frida's iconic mug.

And the marketing of Frida goes even beyond that. Stores in Philadelphia are getting into the act, too.

On funky South Street, Eyes Gallery has an entire Frida window display and inside you can buy a number of Frida items including shrines, earrings and reproduced paintings - the shop specializes in Latin American knicknacks.

Dine with a Frida theme at the modern Mexican cuisine hotspot Xochitl (pronounced so-cheet), where Mexico-native chef Dionicio Jimenez has created a four-course menu (a steal at $35 per person) inspired by some of Kahlo's favorite foods. Start with red hominy and pork stew from Jalisco, similar to what Kahlo and Rivera served at their August 1929 wedding - where it was used to mellow the effects of much tequila and beer. Another featured dish is the Mexican flag-colored Chiles en Nogada, stuffed Poblano peppers with ground beef, creamed walnut sauce and pomegranate seeds - rich and delicious.

Located in the Society Hill neighborhood, Xochitl also specializes in tequila - the place gets its name from the Aztec queen credited with inventing tequila. So naturally, a special drink has been created for Frida fans, Corazon de Frida, made with muddled pineapple, cilantro, lime and blanco tequila - careful, a couple of these will knock your socks off.

Hotels in Philadelphia are offering Frida-themed packages, too, including VIP tickets to the show. Find more at www.philamuseum.org or www.gophila.com.

Philadelphia's got art. Check out some of these art-related attractions:

It's not unusual to look up at a brick wall in Philadelphia and see art. Nearly 3,000 murals throughout the city are the work of the Mural Arts Program, begun in 1984 to redirect the energies of young graffiti writers toward creating art. Today the public/private venture serves thousands of at-risk youth with free art education programs. Two-hour trolley tours show off the works, Saturdays only in April, and Saturday, Sunday and Wednesday from May to November, departing from the Independence Visitor Center at Sixth and Market streets. Adult tickets are $25. For more information, visit www.muralarts.org/tours (reservations strongly recommended).

Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, 118 N. Broad St. (215-972-7600, www.pafa.org), founded in 1805, is the country's oldest art museum and school. The museum's landmark Gothic Victorian building opened in 1876 and houses one of the foremost collections of American art. Adult admission is $7.

Moore College of Art & Design, 20th Street and the Benjamin Franklin Parkway (215-965-4000, www.mo-ore.edu), is a women's art college, with free galleries hosting student, alumnae and visiting artist shows.

The Crane Arts Building, 1400 N. American St., was once home to a plumbing company but has been transformed into artist studios and is home to the large show space known as The Ice Box, displaying visual and multi-media contemporary art. During the Philadelphia Open Studio Tours, Oct. 4-12, many of the artist studios will also be open to the public. Find more at www.cranearts.com and www.philaopenstudios.com.

Venetian Carnivale

Assolutamente fantastico!

Cohasset residents John Coffey, Suzie Montgomery, Carolyn Coffey, and Pam and Doug Wilson at the Art Center's Venetian Carnivale.

In true Carnivale-style, Cohasset's Edythe Ford and Scituate's Janet Fogarty adorn colorful

Joan and Phil Shockman, Dick Karoff, and Judy and Frank Neer, all of Cohasset, enjoy the eveing.

Kiss 108's Billy Costa and South Shore Art Center President Frank Neer pose with Living Statues at Venetian Carnivale.

South Shore Art Center friends gathered at the Red Lion Inn on Friday, Feb. 29th for Venetian Carnivale — the Art Center's winter fundraiser to support its exhibitions and education programs. The Barn at the Red Lion Inn was transformed into a festive celebration of art and culture, featuring Living Statues dressed in traditional Venetian costumes, dance vignettes from Studio 665, and Italian opera selections performed by Beth MacLeod and Kevin Hayden of the South Shore Conservatory. Tony Ambrose's delicious cuisine was artistically presented and enjoyed by all. Rounding out the evening was artist Vcevy Strekalovsky, dressed as a Renaissance painter, who perfectly rendered the evening on canvas!

Decals honor Tim Mahoney

The Cohasset Fire Department is selling blue and white decals featuring Tim Mahoney's initials and the No. 9, which was Tim's jersey number for both the hockey and lacrosse teams at Scituate High where he was a sophomore.

Tim's father, Frank Mahoney, is a Cohasset Fire Captain.

The decals, which sell for $5 each, are available at the Cohasset Fire Headquarters on Elm Street or by calling 781-383-0616. Every dollar taken in will go to the Timothy J. Mahoney Memorial Fund, which has been set up at Scituate Federal Savings Bank, 72 Front St., Scituate, MA 02066.

Tim, 16, was killed in a single-car accident Feb. 2 on Route 3A between Mendel Road and Pond Street. The driver, Chris Barrow, 18, and a senior at Scituate High, remains hospitalized.

Emmee Giarrusso sings the National Anthem to open the 2007 PMC for Kids in Hingham. This year's event will be Sunday, June 22.

PMC KIDS Bike Ride registration open

Kids from the ages of 3 to 15 can register now for the second annual PanMass Challenge Kids Hingham Bike Ride, which is open to all South Shore kids. The event will take place the morning of Sunday, June 22 at the Hingham High School with three routes including a Tykes ride for tricycles and training wheels, a 2-1/2 mile ride and a 7 mile ride into Wompatuck State Park. Kids will be raising funds to go to the Dana Farber Cancer Institute through the Jimmy Fund to contribute to finding a cure for cancer.

The website at kids.pmc.org/hingham already has 21 riders registered which is a start to the more than 500 riders that signed up in 2007. They raised more than $62,000 by collecting change, selling refreshments at sports events, writing letters and doing chores. The organizing committee for this year aims to raise even more in 2008 to donate to the fight against cancer. The riders and volunteers alike had a great time last year with a beautiful day, safe ride and a family friendly after-ride celebration.

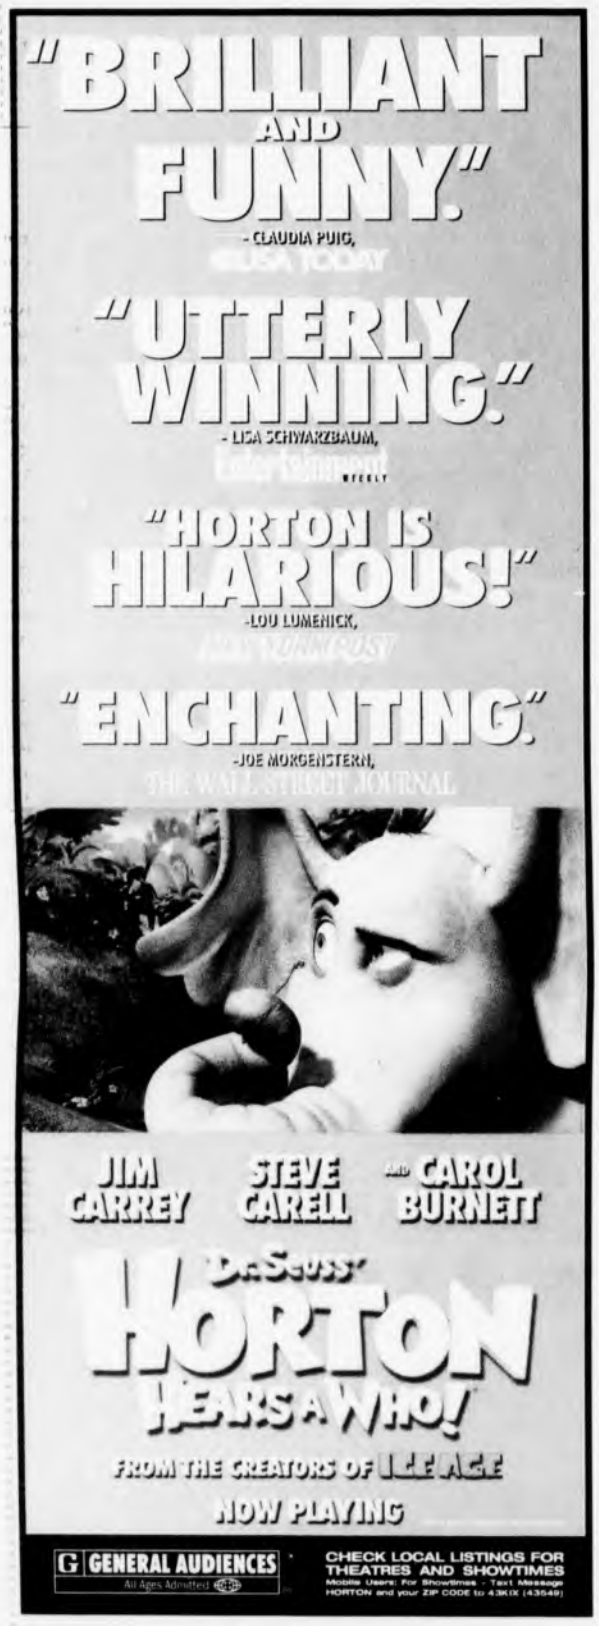
The event this year will be just as fun featuring music from Mix 98.5, Kelley Tuthill as emcee and other entertainment as well as a raffle and silent auction. Hingham Police and Fire Departments, adult PanMass Challenge Riders and others will provide guidance and ensure the ride is safe. A "Heavy Hitters" category is part of this year's event giving special recognition to the young bikers who raise more than $250 as their contribution to this meaningful cause.

"...kids feel they want to help. As parents, we want to shield them from cancer, but they see it in grandparents or friends at school and want to do something."

— Matt Dillis, an eight-year PMC rider and one of this year's co-chairs

Curran Dillis, 8, rode last year and is already signed up for this year's event. His father, Matt Dillis, an eight-year PMC rider and one of this year's co-chairs, comments that "kids feel they want to help. As parents, we want to shield them from cancer, but they see it in grandparents or friends at school and want to do something."

The PMC Kids rides are an outgrowth of the PanMass Challenge, a two-day bike ride which has raised more than $200 million since 1980 to benefit the Dana Farber Cancer Institute and are the largest contributor to The Jimmy Fund. The PMC is also the biggest athletic fundraiser in the country with bikers from all over the nation and the world participating. The Kid's rides raised more than $450,000 in 2007 and the 2008 goal is $700,000. The PMC Kids-Hingham Ride is the most successful kids' event to date drawing riders from all over the South Shore.



The goal of the ride is not only to raise funds for the Dana Farber, but to get children involved in volunteer activities at an early age. The committee believes that this is a great opportunity for them to learn about philanthropy, sharing and working for others while enjoying a beneficial physical activity.

To get more information on the PMC Kids-Hingham Ride and register your rider, go to: kids.pmc.org/hingham.

Fundraising tips, pictures of last year's ride and volunteer information are also at this website. This year the PMC Kids Rides are presented by Stop & Shop and New Balance and many other companies and organizations are participating by donating funds and services.

For ways to participate or donate, email: pmchingham@comcast.net.

Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St. 781-383-0808. Interim Pastor: Richard Chamberlain; Please join us for Sunday Service and Sunday School at 10 a.m. followed by fellowship in Merritt Hall. Accepting donations of new socks for homeless shelters and non-perishable food items for local food pantries.

Bible Study series continues on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m. on Practical Christianity. Some Christians commonly view the Old Testament as a storybook-full of fascinating tales, yet ancient and irrelevant to modern reality. This exceptional 10-week study from Insight For Living with Chuck Swindoll will help you blow the dust off these time-worn chronicles and discover enduring truths that relate directly to you, while translating into reliable patterns for godly living. Experience familiar passages as never before, and find fresh inspiration in the memorable scenes revisited. Follow the examples of faithful Old Testament heroes such as Abraham, Joseph, David, and many others as you learn to apply timeless biblical principles to your everyday life. Please join us.

Guest harpist, Genevieve Poole, will play Sunday. Service begins at 10 a.m.

Our mission statement is: "Equipping God's people for living out the Good News to be the hands, feet, voice and heart of Christ in our community and in the world." How should we accomplish this? Come hear sermons to find out.

First Parish Unitarian Universalist on Cohasset Common, 23 North Main St. (Parish House). 781-383-1100. www.firstparishcohasset.org Minister: the Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull. Interim Director of Religious Education: Jim FitzGerald. Music Director: Allegra Martin. Interim Organists: Carolyn Bates and Maureen Hague. Parish Administrator: Sandy Bailey. Parish Committee Chair: Mary Parker.

We welcome all to our inclusive spiritual community. We affirm our Unitarian Universalist Principles and put them into action by worshiping together, caring for one another, and working for a safe, just, and sustainable world.

Easter Sunday, March 23

6:30 a.m. – Easter Sunrise Service – Sandy Beach, Cohasset

10 a.m. – An Intergenerational Service of Easter – The Meeting House

Come join us as we wonder at the many miracles of Easter. Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull will preach on "Forgiveness and What Comes of It." Jim FitzGerald will lead a dramatic story for us all.

Please bring your infants and children to the Meeting House. The "crying room" on the second floor will be specially equipped for our little ones, where adults can hear the service, and infants and toddlers can make their joyful noise without being heard. This is a fully intergenerational service!

Everyone is invited for refreshments and fellowship in Trueblood Hall directly after the service.

12:00 Noon – Easter Egg Hunt at The Cushings, 271 Beechwood St.

All are welcome as we worship and learn and live our faith together! To learn more about First Parish Unitarian Universalist, please come by the Parish House and pick up or sign up for the current monthly newsletter, The Common, or visit our website at www.firstparishcohasset.org or contact Rev. Dr. Jan Carlsson-Bull, Minister, at 781-383-1100.

Obituary

Janet L. (Racette) Figueiredo

Long-time school bus driver

Janet L. (Racette) Figueiredo, 70, of Cohasset, died March 16, 2008 after a long battle with several illnesses.

She was the daughter of the late Philip and Viola Racette.

Mrs. Figueiredo worked for many years as a bus driver for the Cohasset School System before her retirement.

Wife of the late Louis E "Mickey" Figueiredo, she leaves her longtime partner of Jim Richardson of Cohasset; her children Therese Figueiredo of Hingham, Kathy Tangherlini and Michael Figueiredo, both of Cohasset; grandchildren Justin Green, Matthew Hunnefeld, Alida, Marissa, Nickolas, and Daniel Tangherlini; a brother Robert Racette of Scituate and many nieces and nephews.

She was the sister of the Phyllis Goff, Beth Goff, and Richard Racette.

A graveside service was held Thursday, March 20, in Woodside Cemetery.

Visiting hours were held Wednesday, March 19 at McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St.

In lieu of flowers, donations in her memory may be made to the National Kidney Foundation, 330 East 33rd St., New York, NY 10016.

'Dead Man Walking' author part of Abbey series

Glastonbury Abbey's Inter-religious lecture series Listening To Other Voices: Prophets of Compassion: Who Cares continues. The March 27 lecture "Dead Man Walking: The Journey Continues" features Sister Helen Prejean, CSJ.

Could you walk someone to their death? Sister Helen Prejean has done it a number of times. You saw the walk if you saw the movie "Dead Man Walking," based on her first book. Her second book, "The Death of Innocents: An Eyewitness Accounts of Wrongful Executions." speaks of her witness of the executions of two men whom she believes were innocent and the broken justice system in this country.

In her talk, she will walk you with her and the "dead man" down the Last Mile and challenge you with the question: "If life is God's greatest gift to us, are we free to take it away?" She also will talk about the death and devastation Hurricane Katrina wrought in her native Louisiana.

All lectures are free and begin at 7:15 p.m. in the Glastonbury Conference Center, 16 Hull St., Hingham. Donations gratefully accepted. Reservations recommended by calling 781-749-2155.

The Best & The Brightest

Braintree Forum, Cohasset Mariner, Duxbury Reporter, Hanover Mariner, Hingham Journal, Kingston Mariner, Marshfield Mariner, Norwell Mariner, Old Colony Memorial, Pembroke Mariner & Reporter, Plymouth Bulletin, Scituate Mariner, Wareham Courier, Weymouth News

We know there are many bright, talented and caring young adults in our communities, and this year, a special section entitled "The Best & The Brightest" will appear in the COHASSET MARINER to celebrate their accomplishments.

Please help us find these remarkable teens and young adults by filling out the nomination form on this page. You can nominate an individual between the ages of 16 and 21 who, you believe, deserves to be honored, whether it be for academic achievement, volunteerism, athletics, artistic acumen or the pursuit of excellence in another field. Here's your opportunity to get involved.

You can bring the form to the Community Newspaper Company office at 182 Standish Ave., Plymouth, MA 02360 or mail the form to Beth Doyle, or fax the form to 508-591-6601.

All entries will be considered by a selection panel, and successful nominees will be interviewed and photographed. During the week of May 26th, Community Newspaper Company will include "The Best & The Brightest," a special section devoted to sharing as many of the stories and photographs of those nominated as possible.

"Investor Opportunities Skyrocket"

"Foreclosures up 199% in Boston Last Year"

Invest in your future with Trump U, then invest smart in foreclosures.

Big-money deals in today's real estate market are ripe for the picking. While you may have read that the market is down, the current explosion in real estate foreclosures actually presents a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to make high-dollar profits on quick, low-cost deals.

U.S. foreclosures soared 94% in 2007!* This booming segment of the real estate market has every investor perking up... and so should you. With the right teacher, the right knowledge, and the right strategies, anyone can make the kind of deals you only see on television.

Whether you're a seasoned real estate investor or brand-new to the game and looking to secure your financial future off a couple of deals... real estate foreclosures are the new "it" investment. But like all good things, this window into big-time wealth won't be open forever. So if you're ready to make your move, my foreclosure investing system gives you the tools and resources to make enough money — in just one deal — to change your financial future.

Learning to ride the recent tidal wave of real estate foreclosures has never been FASTER or EASIER... UNTIL NOW.

Right now, there are literally thousands of undervalued properties — many in your area — ready to be purchased far below market value and sold high. In nearly all my years of detecting the most lucrative investment trends, I'd be hard-pressed to find a hotter investment opportunity than foreclosures right now.

Why is the profit potential so great?

1. Foreclosure properties are often sold way below market value. That means you can buy them for next to nothing and sell them for high-percentage profits.

2. Golden opportunity for investors. This is a prime market for new investors to buy and sell quickly. Experienced investors can buy these deeply discounted properties and hold them for an enormous payday down the road.

3. High-quality property. You'd be shocked to see some of the most beautiful houses available (some may even be in your neighborhood) are foreclosures. These are no-rehab-needed profit makers for those who know what they're doing.

4. U.S. foreclosures rose 94% in 2007, and I am confident they will keep rising. This high-volume trend means you won't be searching for available deals. You just need to know where to look for the best ones.

The current rise in foreclosures is an incredible opportunity for you to make legendary real estate deals. It's time to achieve the privileged life you've always dreamed about... not years from now, but just a few short months from now. Investing in foreclosures could make you a millionaire by this time next year. With my system, you'll have the right knowledge, tools, and support to help get you there. For right now, if you're going to learn how to invest in foreclosures while it's a hot market, you need to learn from the best at Trump U. Register today for this life-changing orientation at TrumpUBoston.com or call 888-TRUMP-04. You'll learn everything you need to get started on your path to wealth.

"I'm going to give you 2 hours of access to one of my amazing instructors AND priceless information... all for FREE."

7 strategies you'll learn:

1. How to Find Foreclosure Opportunities in Your Geographic Area: Take advantage of the hot investing opportunities in your neighborhood before anyone else does.

2. How to Offer Distressed Homeowners a Way Out: Learn how to be a hero to homeowners who can't afford their adjustable rate mortgage payment.

3. Credit and Credit Card Repair: Be in good financial standing so you can make money at every stage of the investing process.

4. Financing: How to benefit from specific sources of seed capital and put together your own creative financing deals.

5. The Phases of Foreclosure — Following the Foreclosure Clock: When to make a move and how to capitalize at every stage of the process.

6. What to Do Once You Have the Property: Do you rent, renovate, or sell immediately? Learn what's best for your specific situation.

7. Goal Setting: How to set realistic goals and attain them every time.

Not just anyone can be one of my instructors. It takes a superior level of real-world experience to have a chance to speak in front of Trump U students. My instructors have to practice what they preach. And through their experience, they're armed with the knowledge to teach you the strategies to be successful.

When you come to my foreclosure orientation, you can be certain to hear from some of the most experienced speakers in the real estate industry — men and women who are currently making money investing in real estate and want to teach you how you can too.

"When I heard Mr. Trump was opening a company to train beginning investors, I jumped in. As a result of the program, I bought an investment property and flipped it in four months for a $95,000 profit. My second deal earned me $70,000 in less than a year."
-Jason Bosch, Ontario, CA

"Not only did the program teach me a lot, but it was motivational. I felt confident about what the outcome was going to be. Within nine months, I bought a home for $214,000 and sold it for $420,000, a $200,000 profit."
- David Trejos, Union City, CA

'Bat Boy' among us

Musical flies into Norwell's Company Theatre

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Norwell's Company Theatre has earned a large and loyal local following with first-rate productions of popular Broadway musicals like "Evita," "Grease," "La Cage Aux Folles," and last season's white-hot summer run of "Miss Saigon." Not content to simply rest on a pile of rave reviews of past productions, the creative team of the Norwell theater has decided to go in some new and different directions this season. This fall, they will stage "Doubt," John Patrick Shanley's Pulitzer Prize-winning play about child sex abuse in the Catholic Church. Before tackling that Tony Award-winning drama, however, the theater is mounting another show based on a story ripped from the headlines – in this case headlines from a supermarket tabloid. And no, they're not doing "The Britney Spears Musical" – not yet anyway. Instead, they're presenting "Bat Boy: The Musical," an off-Broadway hit inspired by "The Weekly World News" coverage of a half-bat, half-boy found living in a cave.

"We sold every ticket to every event we presented last season, including the extended runs. We had a record-shattering year which allowed us to consider doing something less well-known, less traditional, like 'Bat Boy' this year," explained co-artistic director and musical director Michael Joseph, now celebrating his 25th anniversary with the Company Theatre, by telephone last week. "Boston's Speakeasy Stage did a phenomenal production of the show about five years ago. When I saw it I loved it, but I thought then that we would probably never get to do it. It seemed too far off radar for our patrons. When I saw it a second time, I realized just how interested I was to have us do it."

On Friday, March 21, any high school student with a valid I.D., can receive one free ticket at the box-office the night of the show.

Joseph's co-artistic directors, Zoe Bradford and Jordie Saucerman, shared his enthusiasm for the off-beat show from British writers Keythe Farley and Brian Flemming and American composer and lyricist Laurence O'Keefe, which premiered off-Broadway in 1997 and in London's West End four years ago. The trio decided to wait for interest in the show to build through other productions. It was while planning for this season that the longtime friends and business partners decided the time was finally right for "Bat Boy" to land on the Company stage.

Co-artistic director and musical director Michael Joseph, celebrates his 25th anniversary with the Company Theatre.

"We knew it was pretty quirky and slightly risky, but we believed our audiences would take the risk with us. This show is not only very, very funny, but it is also very moving. The score is a spoof of great Broadway music that I think our audiences will really identify with. For us, it is very exciting to be bringing something fresh, new and hip to our stage."

Helping to do that, according to Joseph, is a cast headed by 17-year-old high school senior Michael Iemma in the title role.

"We had a lot of interest from actors who are new to the Company Theatre, but just wanted to do this show so they sought us out," says the Stoughton-born Joseph who now makes his home in Weymouth. "Our 'Bat Boy' is schlepping up from Johnston, R.I., every day. He is one of 14 people in the cast, which is smaller than usual for us. Every person has to be right on the money with his or her performance, because there are fewer people on stage to cover whatever may happen. The level of perfection required with this production is higher than usual."

One cast member has been ready to go since nearly joining the Boston production five years ago.

"I was almost in 'Bat Boy' in its second SpeakEasy run when a cast member had a death in his family and had to take time off," explained A. John Porcaro from his day job at State Street in Boston last week. "I have seen the show a few times and I was very familiar with the music from the CD. The other actor returned earlier than expected, however, and I didn't go on. I'm delighted to finally be doing 'Bat Boy' now."

A. John Porcaro of Weymouth plays the sheriff and Michael Iemma of Johnston, R.I., is Bat Boy in "Bat Boy: The Musical" at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, through April 6.

A Quincy native who now lives in East Bridgewater, Porcaro has appeared in 10 Company Theatre productions including "Smokey Joe's Cafe," and at SpeakEasy in "Parade" and "Kiss of the Spiderwoman." In his current role, Porcaro plays the Sheriff of Hope Falls, West Virginia, who is among the first people to meet the cave-dwelling Bat Boy after he is discovered by some spelunking teens.

"The kids capture Bat Boy and they bring him to the sheriff who then takes him to the local veterinarian. Before long, the whole town is arguing about what to do with their newest resident – especially when the unusual boy falls for the veterinarian's daughter," according to Porcaro, who says the badge alone isn't enough to give authority in the confused community. "The sheriff is a bit cocky, because he is the law enforcer in town, but he's also a bit of a Barney Fife, too. He's really not all that brave when it comes right down to it."

The actor admits to perusing a tabloid or two in his time.

"I think a lot of tabloid stories are hysterically funny and also very entertaining. And right from the get go, our show lets people know they're in for a tabloid musical," Porcaro points out. "The story is handled in such a way, however, that it also stands for a lot of other things and not just humor. The real point of the show is whether the Bat Boy is different from or perhaps just like the rest of us."

"Bat Boy: The Musical" will be at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, through April 6. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787 or go online at companytheatre.com.

DAFFODIL DAYS, the fundraiser held each year by the American Cancer Society is taking place at King Jewelers Inc. 812 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, Cohasset. The public is invited to place orders for the spring flowers. Daffodils bouquets are $10 each and consist of 10 stems. One hundred percent of the proceeds generated is donated to the American Cancer Society. Flowers may be pre-ordered at anytime. Bouquets will be available to be claimed at the store on March 18 to 22. A springtime party will be held in the store March 18 as visitors claim their flowers. King's will host Maryann Englander of Dragonfly Studios in Cohasset and her jewelry designs. For information call Valerie King at 781-383-1755, visit www.KingJewelersInc.com

THE BLUE HILLS TRAILSIDE MUSEUM will hold its 11th annual auction on Saturday, March 29, from 6:30 to 10:30 pm at The Lantana, 43 Scanlon Drive, Randolph. The evening's events will include a silent auction followed by dinner and a live auction. A cash bar will be available. Items offered for auction consist of many one of a kind items, including a baseball autographed by Jonathan Papelbon, other sports memorabilia along with tickets to major sporting and theater events, original artwork, wine, and many other interesting items and activities. Tickets are $75 per person. Auction donations are welcome. To donate an item, or to volunteer contact the museum at 617-333-0690 or send e-mail to bluehills@masaudubon.org. If you cannot attend the event but would like to support this fundraising effort, mail your donation to Mass Audubon's Blue Hills Trailside Museum, 1904 Canton Ave, Milton, MA 02186.

THE NORWELL WOMEN'S CLUB will be sponsoring its yearly Fashion Show, "Hats off to Charity", April 3, at Indian Pond Country Club in Kingston. The event will feature clothing and accessories from many local businesses, and will also feature elegant recovery clothing from Healing Threads by Spirited Sisters. contact Pat Bigger at tpbigger@aol.com or Chris Gillis at seagirley.com for more information about this year's Fashion Show.

ELISABETH VON TRAPP will perform in her family's tradition April 6 at St. Mary's Church in Scituate Harbor. Von Trapp is a member of the famous Von Trapp family of Vermont. Tickets are $20 for adults and $10 for children with proceeds benefiting a number of the Scituate Rotary Club projects.

SCITUATE APPALACHIAN SERVICE PROJECT GROUP On June 21-29, fifty high school students and 20 adults from four churches in Scituate will travel to West Virginia with the Appalachian Service Project to repair and rebuild homes for families in need. This is the fourth annual trip for the group, which includes members from four Scituate churches: First Trinitarian Congregational, St, Mary's, St. Luke's and the First Parish Unitarian Church. To help defray expenses for the trip, the Scituate ASP group is hosting a unique fundraiser: The Grand Ole Opry Dinner and Auction, to be held Saturday, March 29, from 6:30 to 11 p.m., at St. Mary's Parish Hall in Scituate. The evening includes a down home Barbeque by The Borrowed Butler, music by The Gr8fuls, dancing, and silent and live auctions. This year, each teen has built a wooden box as a project, to learn how to measure and use power tools, for the trip. The boxes have been decorated and signed by artists and celebrities from all over the South Shore, and will be auctioned off at the event. Tickets to the event are $35; there is a cash bar. Tickets are available through any of the participating churches, by calling Maureen Keys at 781-545-1348 or Alice Gillan at 781-545-4979.

Theater review

Can you tell me how to get to 'Avenue Q?'

Sesame Street inspired play hits Boston's Colonial Theatre

By R. Scott Reedy

The cast of "Avenue Q" plays at the Colonial Theatre, in Boston through March 23.

The press materials for "Avenue Q" can say what they want, but to suggest that there should never be a comparison between "Sesame Street" and the delightfully racy musical now at Boston's Colonial Theatre is just downright silly. But then, like their more innocent counterparts on "Sesame Street," so are many of the puppet characters found in and on "Avenue Q." Both "Avenue Q" and the landmark PBS series that so obviously inspired it use humor and abundant warmth to impart their respective life lessons.

Can anything else explain a Trekkie Monster whose Internet porn fixation is oddly reminiscent of a certain Cookie Monster's endless appetite for food? Or a closeted gay investment banker, Rod, who probably has a bachelor uncle, Bert, with a longtime companion named Ernie? Clearly, the sprightly national tour of "Avenue Q," the 2004 Tony Award winner for Best Musical, Best Book, and Best Score, is not meant for young children. But if you're a grownup who spent your childhood glued to the television following the exploits of Oscar the Grouch and company – and you can handle full puppet nudity that goes further than Kathleen Turner ever did in "The Graduate" – then this may be just the show for you.

A slice-of-life look at a group of 20-something people and puppets, "Avenue Q" tells the story of Princeton, an aptly named recent college grad who moves to New York City with big hopes and dreams and one very small bank account. He finds the only apartment he can afford on Avenue Q, where his neighbors are also in search of good jobs, stable relationships, and a purpose in life. Princeton's newfound friends include Brian, an out-of-work stand-up comic, and his Japanese-American fiancée, Christmas Eve, a short-on-clients therapist; a pair of unmarried men, Nicky and Rod, who share an apartment; a kindergarten teacher, Kate Monster, willing to put down the Play-Doh for romance with Princeton; and Gary Coleman, the now grown-up child star of "Diff'rent Strokes" fame. (Just an aside, but wouldn't it be nice to see the real Gary Coleman playing himself? Many a has-been has breathed new life into an old career with Broadway replacement work in long-running shows like "Chicago" and "Hairspray." Why should Gary Coleman be any different? Carla Renata does good work here, but one has to wonder what Mr. Coleman himself would do with this role. His presence would certainly seem to fit well within this show's silliness quota.)

Renata's Coleman is one of three non-puppet characters here, the others being Cole Porter as the comedian and Sala Imawatsu as his fiancée, a young woman whose accent has out-lived her acculturation. If you find yourself shaking your head at what seems to be a very dated, stereotypical depiction of a Japanese-American, just look around and you'll see that you're not alone. But even with a hairdo that looks like it was copied from a 1960s troll doll, Imawatsu manages to be quite appealing – especially as she leads the cast in the wickedly funny "Everyone's a Little Bit Racist."

The others in this very fine company lend wonderful voices and great charm, too, as they act alongside their felt-faced puppets and bring them so vividly to life. Robert McClure employs great aplomb to play not one, but two of the show's very different male leads – Princeton and Rod. McClure is hysterically funny on Princeton's lyrical lament "B.A. in English." And, when Rod defends his heterosexuality with "My Girlfriend Who Lives in Canada," McClure makes the skittish character not just laughable, but very lovable. Kelli Sawyer is terrific, too, as both the unsure Kate and the bejeweled temptress, Lucy the Slut, who is what you'd get if you crossed Mae West with Paris Hilton and turned the resultant blonde bombshell into a hand puppet.

Co-creators and composers Robert Lopez and Jeff Marx may have been inspired by something very familiar, but what they have created – with help from Jeff Whitty's book for the show and Jason Moore's direction – is fresh in every meaning of the word, and why not? Who better than the next generation, even if they're puppets, to poke pointed fun at their own insecurities as they make their way in the uncertain world they've inherited?

Incidentally, the puppets may be expressionless, but with considerable help from designer Rick Lyon they still command the stage. Thankfully, the "we have nothing to do with 'Sesame Street'" message seems not to have reached Lyon, who gratefully acknowledges "the inspiration and encouragement of the late Jim Henson" in his "Playbill" bio.

"Avenue Q" will be at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston, through March 23. For tickets and information visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at broadwayacrossamerica.com.

Ted Carroll will take over the reins at the Recreation Department about May 1. The former Recreation Commissioner is a lifelong resident and started working with retiring Recreation Director Jack Worley when he was still in high school.

Worley to pass the baton to Carroll

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The search was far and wide but the results were close to home.

Town Manager Bill Griffin has appointed Ted Carroll of Bancroft Road, a lifelong resident, as Recreation Director.

Carroll will replace Jack Worley, who is retiring at the end of next month after 32 years in the post.

However, "replace" could be a misnomer.

As the Board of Selectmen noted Monday that Worley – who is always the first one at Town Hall in the morning and the last to leave at night – is not "replaceable."

But Carroll, 41, could be as close as one gets.

In an interview this week, Worley warmly described Carroll as "a micro-manager just like me – we leave nothing to chance."

"Recreation has been my calling since I attended recreation programs in town."
— Ted Carroll

Worley should know. He said Carroll came to Cohasset Recreation when he was still in high school and has been involved one way or another practically ever since.

Carroll spent many years as a playground counselor and then as playground director. He has also served as a Recreation Commissioner, resigning recently when he decided to apply for Worley's post.

"He has always wanted to be here," Worley said of Carroll. "I took him under my wing and taught him everything I know."

It has almost been like a parent-child relationship. "It has been a good relationship and this has been Ted's dream job," he said. "I am glad that it worked out for him."

Griffin said the town received 30 resumes for the job. Six candidates were chosen for a personal interview; one dropped out, so five were interviewed.

The interview team included Griffin, Jim Richardson and Lisa Offerman of the Recreation Commission; Finance Director Michael Buckley; and Jennifer Vitelli, recreation director in Scituate.

Big issues on table

Town Meeting starts at 9 a.m. at CHS

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Should the town devote $300,000 to the restoration of Treat's Pond? How about establishing an affordable housing trust? Is Cohasset ready to implement regulations for wind turbines?

These issues — and more — will each get their chance to take center stage at tomorrow's Annual Town Meeting. Starting promptly at 9a.m. at the Cohasset High School gymnasium, Town Meeting has plenty of hefty issues for voters to weigh in on. Important (and some controversial) issues are spread throughout the 25 article Town Meeting warrant from the fiscal 2009 operating budget (article 3) to the stormwater management bylaw (article 24).

Given the issues on the agenda, town officials are not really worried about achieving a quorum, which in Cohasset is 100 registered voters.

"There are a lot of important issues and first time changes," said Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil. "It will be an interesting Town Meeting. I'm looking forward to it."

As Vanderweil ran down the list of articles, he listed off many he considered important — and potentially debatable among Town Meeting attendees. The operating budget, although presented with no override, is always an important issue, he said. The proposal of the capital stabilization fund (article 9), wind energy zoning bylaw (article 14) and affordable housing trust (article 19) are all brand new proposals and could provoke questions or concerns from the audience, said Vanderweil.

The Treat's Pond restoration project (article 22) is sure to cause a few waves on the floor of Town Meeting following significant debate both at recent Selectmen's meetings and in the Mariner editorial pages.

With significant issues on the table, Vanderweil said he hopes citizens will come out to participate in the Town Meeting forum.

"If people don't go to Town Meeting, there's no town government. The power

Ripley Road condo plans

Project being filed as a '40B'

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The large, white house, built in 1889 at the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street, is about to start a new chapter.

It had come full circle from a single-family home to a hospital, then nursing home, and then back to a single family home again.

Cohasset resident, Will Charles, is now proposing a seven-unit condominium development, under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

The plans are similar to those proposed by Cohasset Housing Partnership offered in early 2007 but, due to neighborhood opposition, the partnership moved on to other opportunities.

Charles and his Norwell-based attorney, Robert Devin, introduced themselves to Selectmen on Monday night.

Under Chapter 40B, the zoning board can approve affordable housing developments under flexible rules if at least 20-25 percent of the units have long-term affordability restrictions. Towns that are under the 10 percent threshold of their housing stock deemed as affordable by state standards, like Cohasset, are vulnerable to 40-B projects.

Although a 40B project does not have to "make the rounds" with other boards besides zoning, Devin said he and Charles would be meeting with the Cohasset Housing Partnership in April to go over the plans.

"We don't want to be a hostile developer, we want to be friendly," Devin said. "We don't claim to have all the answers and are open to suggestions."

Progress 2008

Don't miss the 2008 issue of Progress & Innovation, a special section in this week's newspaper. Progress annually explores the evolution of our regional marketplace.

In this year's issue, we look at how a tax credit has encouraged Hollywood to come to Massachusetts, how the addition of clinics in CVS stores will affect our health-care options, and how local businesses and homeowners are embracing "green" technology to preserve our environment.

From home-based businesses providing their owners with flexibility to international companies innovating in biotechnology to financial planners helping us make the most from what we have, we take a long look at what's happening in our business community.

So please take a look yourself and see what's going on in your own backyard.

Name: Mike Marks.

Occupation: Chief Astro-guide.

Best day of your life: Every day I can enjoy the cosmos!

Best vacation: The one I take with my wife each year!

Favorite season: Autumn — oh, that refreshing air, those glorious colors, crumply leaves, pumpkin-caroling hayrides, and hot mulled apple cider.

Favorite holiday: Christmas, especially when it is a white one.

Favorite junk food: Dark, rich, melt-in-your-mouth chocolate — hmmm yum.

Favorite song: "Thank You for the Music," by Abba.

Best movie or actor: First "Star Wars 2", but I always enjoy Jack Nicholson

Best TV show: "Mr. Wizard."

Most memorable moment: Personal tour of Parliament in London, an incredible six-hour experience. It's a wonder how they get any work done with 26 bars and restaurants on the premises.

Pet peeve: Why do I always pick the wrong checkout line?

Goal: Have fun, get paid.

Person you'd most like to meet: Michael Faraday.

Biggest worry: Will my wrinkle-free shirts really last?

Best part of Cohasset: Opportunity to participate in the Osgood School Math and Science Night event. Clear dark skies and thank you everyone!

Refunding plan for bonds

Town Finance Director Michael Buckley has played a role in saving the town about $245,000 over 10 years.

Town Manager Bill Griffin told selectmen Monday that Buckley worked with the town's financial advisor to determine if a plan for bonds issued in 1998 was to the town's advantage.

Griffin said he was pleased to report that Bank of America is willing to purchase the bonds at an interest rate of 3.02 percent. The old rates vary from 4 percent to 4.7 percent. He explained that most of the debt is associated with debt exclusion projects such as the new Osgood School and DPW garage. The savings will reduce the town's annual exempt debt by about $20,000 a year.

Vanderweil's last meeting

Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil figuratively retired the gavel on Monday as it was his last regular selectmen's meeting. The board has posted a meeting for 8 a.m. Saturday before the annual Town Meeting to go over any last-minute items.

Vanderweil is stepping down from town elected office after 20 years on the Sewer Commission, followed by a three-year term on the Board of Selectmen.

While Selectmen Chairman, Vanderweil ran efficient meetings, sticking to agenda times in most cases.

However, his fellow board members teased him on Monday when the agenda ran an hour late due to a discussion about Treat's Pond.

"It has been a pleasure," Vanderweil said about his service as a selectman. "But now I can watch Monday night meetings from the comfort of my living room."

Rabies clinic offered May 17

The Town of Hull will be hosting its Second Annual Multi-town Rabies Clinic offering reduced cost rabies vaccines for dogs and cats in Hull, Cohasset, Hingham and Norwell, on Saturday, May 17, from 2 to 4 p.m.

Dr. Grace Strake, DVM, South Coastal Animal Health, Weymouth, will be assisting the Town of Hull, administering these vaccinations. The clinic will be held behind Hull Police Headquarters, 1 School St., Vaccinations will be $10.

All dogs must be leashed. Aggressive dogs must be muzzled. All cats must be crated.

Police cruisers getting up there

Union concerned about safety

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Police Association, which is the police officers' union, is concerned about the safety of the police department's fleet.

To that end, CPA president Officer James P. McLean, wrote to selectmen to express concern on behalf of the union with the intent of supporting Chief James Hussey's efforts through the capital budget process to upgrade the cruisers.

"The mileage on the department's front line cruisers ranges from 100,000 to 140,000 miles," McLean stated in his March 1 letter. "Due to the nature of the use of these cars, equipment malfunctions and failure have a higher probability of occurring with this amount of mileage.

"Although vigilant maintenance being performed on the cruisers may extend the life of them, they are at the point of being unsafe to drive."

In the letter, McLean said the union is concerned that an equipment failure could occur during an emergency response endangering the lives of officers and the public.

When the issue was raised during the selectmen's comment period Monday, Town Manager Bill Griffin said he asked Chief James Hussey to conduct an analysis of the fleet for selectmen and the Capital Budget Committee.

In a March 19 letter to Town Manager Bill Griffin, Chief James Hussey projected an up-to-date list of the police motor vehicles with mileage.

- 881 (unmarked Chief of Police car), 2000 Ford Crown Victoria with 113,624 miles;
- 882 (marked cruiser/used 24/7), 2003 Ford Crown Victoria with 139,299 miles;
- 883 (marked cruiser/used 24/7), 2005 Ford Crown Victoria with 127,746 miles;
- 884 (marked cruiser/used 24/7), 2005 Ford Crown Victoria with 125,427 miles;
- 885 (unmarked prosecutor car), 1995 Ford Crown Victoria with 100,011 miles;
- 886 (marked Sgt./Lt. car), 2005 Ford Crown Victoria with 99,181 miles;
- 888 (marked patrol), 2004 Ford Expedition, with 58,738 miles;
- Delta One (unmarked detective), 2000 Ford Taurus with 185,978 miles;
- Delta Two (unmarked detective) 2002 Mercury Sable with 72,250 miles.

Hussey stated cars 882, 883 and 884 are marked cruisers, one of which is usually a spare and used when another is out of service. He said police generally have two officers working on patrol.

Also, at times, 886 is used as a third patrol car when there is not a sergeant/lieutenant on shift.)

The Ford Expedition (888) is four-wheel drive vehicle used during the winter or for special events, whose use the department tries to limit to increase its life expectancy.

The prosecutor car (885) is used for the officer to travel back and forth to Quincy District Court and to her duties with the schools and the elderly.

In a telephone interview, Chief Hussey said one new cruiser is on order. Money was approved for its purchase at the fall Special Town Meeting. He explained a cruiser costs about $30,000 depending on whether light bars and that type of equipment can be used from the retiring cruiser. The new car should arrive sometime in April or May, he said.

Griffin said Tuesday that he met with McLean who explained the union hoped the letter would help support the Chief's efforts with the Capital Budget Committee, Selectmen and Advisory Committee.

Griffin said McLean knows the town will not be looking at further capital projects until it moves toward the fall Town Meeting, so he does not feel it necessary to meet with the Selectmen at this time.

Town study of Treat's Pond proposed

Selectman Paul Carlson's efforts to win support to have the town do its own engineering study on Treat's Pond failed with a tie vote of the Board of Selectmen on Monday.

Carlson and chairman Gary Vanderweil supported the motion but Fred Koed and Ted Carr were opposed. Ralph Dormitzer, a neighbor of Treat's Pond, recused himself from the discussion.

Carlson's effort, however, did result in another lengthy discussion on the Treat's Pond issue and served as another indicator that Saturday's Town Meeting discussion could be heated and passionate about its future.

The proposal would have asked the town to appropriate no more than $100,000 to look at flooding of residential properties in the neighborhood and what environmental impacts any potential solutions would have.

The study would still leave the door open to the potential of the town receiving a federal grant to restore the saltmarsh.

Carlson said he had received assurances from US Rep. Bill Delahunt's office that federal money would still be available for the Treat's Pond restoration project after the fall Special Town Meeting, should the town study determine that was the best solution.

Selectmen appeared to be divided on the Treat's Pond article, itself, although they have recommended it by a vote of 4-0 to Town Meeting.

Selectman Fred Koed said flooding is a town-wide issue and townspeople need to be comfortable that flooding issues are prioritized. He said it was important to make people feel comfortable that "no one is being left out."

While Atlantic Avenue can flood during heavy storms – Jacob's Meadow where the sewer plant is located and has overflowed, appears to pose a more serious health issue.

Selectman Ted Carr said it was time to let the voters decide the issue. He said the town had sent a clear signal to Delahunt in support of the plan and the funding, which would include a federal grant.

"I am in favor of moving with the current article and letting the people decide," he said.

POLICE BEAT

Dog bite, accidents and bathroom intruder

Myriad incidents reported last week

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A man, who was bitten by a dog in Wheelwright Park, at first said he would seek his own treatment but later came to police headquarters after he discovered the dog had broken the skin on his calf.

The incident occurred about 12:10 p.m. on Tuesday (March 18), police said.

The owner of the dog was identified and the animal was properly licensed and had had all its shots.

The dog had apparently broken away when the man was bitten.

Chief Hussey said paramedics checked the wound.

The victim has the name of the dog owner should he seek any further medical attention or a formal complaint.

MV crashes

- At about 12:30 p.m., on Tuesday (March 18), an accident was reported in the parking lot at Cohasset Family Practice off Route 3A. Police heard different versions from both drivers and were unable to determine who was at fault. A 2000 Honda, owned and operated by a Weymouth resident, was backing out of a space when the collision occurred with a 2005 Toyota, owned and operated by a Brockton resident. The Toyota was traveling through the aisle. There was minor damage to the Toyota. Police assisted the motorists with exchanging papers.
- A hit and run in the Shaw's parking lot was reported at 1:25 p.m. on Tuesday (March 18). The walk-in told police she had been shopping for about 20 minutes and when she came out there was damage near the left rear door of her 2008 Saab station wagon. Police have examined the damage to see if there is any paint or evidence from the other car and they are reviewing the surveillance tapes. The victim reported the incident about an hour after discovering the damage. Chief Hussey said it is better if the motorist calls from the scene so police can get there right away and may have a better chance to find witnesses and other evidence.
- At 11:57 a.m. on Wednesday (March 19), a 2003 Chrysler, owned and operated by a Scituate resident, that was heading west on Sohier Street by Deer Hill School stopped to let a school bus out when it was "rear-ended" by a 1999 Toyota, owned and operated by a Cohasset resident. There were no injuries but there was minor damage to both cars.

The operator of the Toyota was cited for traveling too close.

- At 5:13 p.m. on Saturday (March 22), there was a very minor accident at Summer and South Main streets. A Cohasset man driving a 2003 Saab backed into a 2001 Ford Explorer operated by a Plymouth woman. The woman said the Saab did not stop after contact so she followed him. She said he refused to exchange papers when confronted. He was cited for failing to make himself known after an accident.

Injured deer

The Environmental Police were contacted and responded to a report of an injured deer off Holly Lane with what appeared to be a bone sticking out of its leg.

The animal, which had apparently had been hit by a car, had to be destroyed. The caller reported seeing the deer lying on its back at about 9:18 a.m. Wednesday (March 19).

Loose ledge

Police notified the DPW about some loose ledge that appeared to be ready to roll down the hill and into traffic on Sohier Street last Saturday (March 22). The DPW took care of the problem, police said. The caller reported the potential hazard at 11:30 a.m.

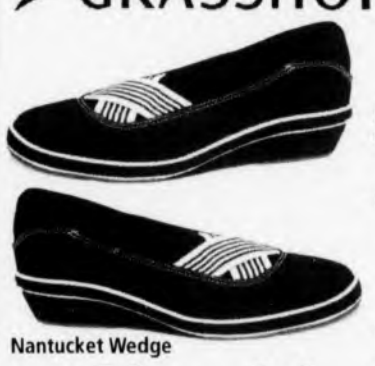
Bathroom intruder

A bizarre situation has been reported by a Short Street resident who went to headquarters to report the entering of the home and unauthorized use of the bathroom on several occasions over the past couple of weeks. Police saw some plaster dust in the bathroom but do not have any other clues. The homeowner is going to replace the locks, Chief Hussey said. Police are doing some checks in the area but have not been able to figure out who would do such a thing. Nothing appears to have been taken.

Vandalism

An Elm Court resident found that someone had thrown a cobblestone through the car window of his 1991 VW Jetta on Saturday (March 22). The incident was reported at 11:56 a.m. Apparently the resident came out that morning to discover the back window had been smashed with the stone. The incident is under investigation.

Assault



Police responded to a call from a witness to an alleged assault and battery on Border Street at just before 2 p.m. on Sunday (March 23). However, when police arrived the witness and alleged suspect were there but the alleged victim had left the scene. Police need to talk to the victim in order to complete the report.

Bounced checks

On Friday (March 21) a walk-in at the police station reported that two checks written to her by a business in town were returned for non-sufficient funds. She said the owner of the business would not make good on the checks. Police said at this stage the checks are considered "bounced." In time, police will determine if this develops into a crime, Chief Hussey said.

Spring Cleaning Starts with Books!

By Michelle Bushee

Ahh, springtime. The sun is shining, birds are chirping, and flowers are blooming, but your house still has the winter blues. As the season approaches, many people feel the need for a major cleaning overhaul after a long winter slumber. Floors are scrubbed, walls are washed, and woodwork is polished, but there is more that can be done clearing out your used books.

Have you ever wondered what to do with that pile of old mystery books filling up your bookshelf? How about the mound of cookbooks spilling out of your kitchen or the heap of textbooks collecting dust on your desk? We've all got them and now we can donate them to Got Books. They make it easy - they'll pick them up at your home or you can drop them off at one of their many local donation containers.

Got Books is a local organization which is dedicated to finding new homes for used books. Their focus is on REUSE and their mission is to keep books out of the trash. Every effort is made to find a great new purpose for each donation. They have a program which gets teachers free books for their classrooms, they've pledged to send at least 25,000 books overseas to the troops in 2008, and they sell books at book sales and online. No books go to waste!

With services like this, the spring cleaning tradition isn't only good for your home; it can be good for the environment as well. And with the convenience of a free donation pick-up service, it can be easy too! Got Books offers its services throughout Massachusetts and Southern New Hampshire. For more information, contact Got Books at 978-664-3536 or visit www.GotBooks.com.

Charles assured that the building would be appealing and an asset to the neighborhood. He noted other condo conversions involving larges homes in town that have been successful.

Devin said they would deal with the neighbors in "good faith."

"We will address some concerns but there will be people who don't want it period. We want to hear ideas …the reason we are here tonight is to tell you we want to work with the town."

The house at 25 Ripley Road is on 6/10th of an acre. The current 2-1/2-story, 2,200-square-foot building has 13 bedrooms and seven bathrooms. It is on town sewer.

Charles, who is president of Cohasset Mortgage Co., Inc., purchased the property for $638,100 in June 2007 and has made improvements and repairs in excess of $200,000, according to paperwork submitted to the selectmen.

Two of the seven units would be sold as affordable at $180,000 each and five would be market-rate, at $415,000.

After purchasing cost, site preparation, landscaping, and construction, Charles expects to make a profit of 16.2 percent or about $329,000.

Mindy Evans, 26 Sohier St., who was in the audience, said the neighbors were brought in "at the very tail" of the housing partnership proposal, hence the opposition.

"Our biggest concern was it was a fait à compli — then we were asked for our input," she said. "Secondly, density. People would like to see less density."

Martha Gjesteby, 81 Old Pasture Road, said also alluded to density concerns when she said the seven units would have to be small.

Two of the seven units would be sold as affordable at $180,000 each and five would be market-rate, at $415,000.

But Devin said reducing density is always a function of economic feasibility. "Mass Housing won't issue a site approval unless it is determined the project is economically feasible."

State approval is required for comprehensive permit (40-B) developments.

Charles, under the auspices of Ripley Associates LLP, plans to file a comprehensive permit application with the Zoning Board of Appeals once the site approval from the state is obtained.

Clark Brewer of the housing partnership said the partnership was surprised it was not contacted before the project applied for site approval from the state. He expressed some concerns over the parking plans for the site.

Parking and other issues will be on the agenda when the project is discussed with the partnership on April 9, Devin said.

Charles has extended the proverbial "olive branch" to the community. In October, he hosted a "Vampires Ball" at the house to raise money for the basketball boosters and to let people know his plans for the building.

He said he planned to keep the basic architecture of the historic building intact.

Lottery sales up despite economy

By Kyle Cheney
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Despite a floundering economy, instant ticket sales are soaring, state lottery officials said this week.

Ticket sales are up 10 percent this calendar year over the previous year, reaping $222 million. Since Sept. 25, sales for the $20 Blockbuster game have crossed $520 million, causing even some members of the Lottery Commission, which met today, to do a double-take.

"It's off the charts. It's really off the charts," said state Treasurer Timothy Cahill, who chairs the Lottery Commission.

The spike in ticket sales, coupled with a decline in Keno sales, balanced out to a $194 million, or 6 percent greater windfall this fiscal year than last year. Fiscal 2008 sales are projected to surpass fiscal 2006 sales by $117 million, or 3.5 percent. Fiscal 2006 was the lottery's best-performing year on record, executive director Mark Cavanagh said.

Cavanagh said the only noticeable effect of a worsening economy on the lottery was the loss of Keno revenue. Keno is suffering, he said, because it requires players to be on site at participating restaurants or bars, which have all seen slower business as the economy has slid toward recession.

"People are going out on the weekends, but they're going out less," he said. "They may be doing their Friday or Saturday or Sunday out but not going out earlier in the week. Earlier in the week, places are not doing well."

Lottery officials are rolling out Keno-to-Go, which enables players to check Keno results on the lottery's web site. They estimate the rollout will generate an additional $100 million in sales and $20 million in added revenue for local aid. According to lottery estimates, players bought more than $775 million in Keno tickets in fiscal 2007 and won more than $538 million in prizes. The lottery has 1,776 Keno agents, and about 7,500 licensed agents overall.

Cahill, who announced the state would be borrowing an additional $400 million to pay its bills, said he had conveyed the optimistic lottery figures to the Patrick administration and Senate President Therese Murray, and that he would be meeting with House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi soon to go over the details.

Lottery officials frequently dispute characterizations by the administration and lawmakers that the lottery is in shortfall, pointing to record-breaking sales and measures such as the 10 percent boost in instant ticket revenue. Rather, lottery officials contend, the lottery has fallen short of unrealistic benchmarks set by budget writers.

State leaders continue to portray the lottery as having a revenue "shortfall" or being in "deficit," as House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi contended in a statement announcing a local aid resolution two weeks ago.

Absent from the lottery commission discussion this week was the defeat of Gov. Deval Patrick's resort casino proposal. Most analysts had predicted that introducing casinos to Massachusetts would take a bite out of state lottery proceeds, which are in turn doled out to cities and towns in the form of local aid.

The commission on Wednesday approved a $119,000 increase to a contract to repair instant ticket vending machines, which Cahill called "the backbone of our system." The treasurer said the machines were "ancient," some at least 15 years old.

In the long run, Cahill said, the commission may have to appeal to the Legislature to help fund a $50 million replacement for about 7,500 terminals.

Keno-to-Go coming to a store near you

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Casinos may not be in the state's immediate future — but gambling is still a big part of the state budget and ultimately those of cities and towns.

Lottery agents across the Commonwealth, including eight in Cohasset, are eligible for a new type of Keno license, "Keno-to-Go."

According to a letter to Town Manager Bill Griffin from Mark J. Cavanagh, executive director of the lottery commission, the state lottery is in the midst of its best year ever with projected sales increases of more than 6 percent, along with profits of more than $900 million.

Cohasset received $474,221 in lottery aid in fiscal 2008 and is projected to receive the same amount in fiscal 2009, which begins July 1.

Cavanagh said the state lottery is always looking for new initiatives to maintain and increase aid to communities and expects Keno-to-Go to raise millions more with no added expenditure.

"This policy provides all lottery customers with the opportunity to play Keno."
— Mark J. Cavanagh, Massachusetts State Lottery Commission

What is proposed is selling Keno tickets at all existing agents other than the limited number that offer the game. Keno-to-Go locations would not have a Keno monitor. Current Lottery agents who sell other products will be allowed to apply to become Keno-to-Go agents. The sale of Keno-to-Go tickets would be nearly identical to sales of Mass Cash, Megabucks, Mega Millions or other on-line games.

"This policy provides all lottery customers with the opportunity to play Keno," Cavanagh stated.

Lottery agents in Cohasset include: A Taste of Wine and Spirits, 380 CJC Highway; Cohasset Mobil, 190 King St.; Cohasset News, 3 Brook St.; Curtis Liquors, 780 CJC Hwy.; Fiori's Exxon, 740 CJC Hwy.; Shaw's, 739 CJC Hwy.; Stop & Shop 400 CJC Hwy.; and Tedeschi's 52 S. Main St.

According to published reports, letters introducing the new game and listing eligible vendors were sent to 331 cities and towns on March 14.

Town officials can approve the program, opt out or ask for more time to consider the matter.

The lottery web site says players bought more than $775 million in Keno tickets last fiscal year and won more than $538 million in prizes. Currently, the Massachusetts State Lottery has approximately 1,776 Keno agents among its total of 7,500 licensed agents.

Lottery officials estimate the Keno-to-Go program will result in increased annual sales of about $100 million when fully implemented. The program will likely generate about $20 million more in aid for Massachusetts communities, the lottery says.

Cohasset Selectmen decided not to object to the Keno-to-Go program.

Griffin explained, "To do so, it is my understanding, the board would have had to hold a public hearing with the eight establishments currently licensed to sell lottery tickets, take their input, then decide if they wanted to request a hearing with the Lottery Commission to object to the program here in town.

"And, they would have had to do all that within 21 days of notice from the state," he said.

Griffin said as it stands, all eight establishments that sell lottery tickets would be allowed to see Keno-to-Go tickets. Only Cohasset Food Mart has an actual Keno screen on site. The lottery commission has not made it clear if establishments with Keno screens can also offer Keno-to-Go.

"Keno-to-Go will not involve Keno screens," Griffin said. "People will play their Keno numbers, get a ticket, and then check their numbers on the computer at home as described in the letter from the Lottery Commission."

Endowment Wall honors library donors

The Cohasset Library Trust has recently installed an Endowment Donor Wall at the entry to the library. It honors the more than 20 people who have, over more than 100 years, made significant gifts to the library. These gifts have created the library's endowment. Some gifts have been as bequests in a donor's will. Others have been gifts from friends or family to memorialize or honor individuals.

From time to time, the Library Trust plans to offer short sketches of the people whose names are on the Donor Wall.

One of the earliest gifts to the Cohasset Library's endowment was a 1901 bequest of $500 from the will of Alexander Williams to the Cohasset Free Library. Mr. Williams summered in Cohasset for more than 25 years and, in Bigelow's "History of Cohasset," is referred to as a resident of Beach Street.

The New York Times in his obituary referred to him as "Boston's famous pioneer bookseller and publisher." Williams was born in Boston in 1818 and by 1841 was the head of the firm Redding & Co., a store that Williams made "the centre of attraction for all who sought the latest English newspapers and the newest American periodicals, books and newspapers. On the arrival of a steamer from England, the British flag was displayed at the doorway to indicate that the foreign newspapers were on the counter, and the signal was invariably followed by a rush. In 1869, he became the proprietor of the 'Old Corner Bookstore' at the corner of School and Washington streets in Boston. The place soon became "a resort (sic) of leading authors and distinguished persons."

When not in Cohasset, Williams lived on Newbury Street in Boston with his wife and four children. His sons, Alexander and Robert, also became Cohasset summer residents.

He died in 1900 at the age of 81 years and his bequest to the Cohasset Free Library was made before the Paul Pratt Memorial Library was completed. The Town of Cohasset established the Cohasset Free Public Library in the early 1880s and had a modest collection of books located in Town Hall.

Williams gift of $500 was the equivalent of a gift of more than $12,000 today. A small percent of its value has been used annually to support the library's book budget, and its principal has maintained its purchasing power over the years.

The Cohasset Library Trust was established to increase and prudently manage the Library's Endowment. Tax support of the Library has been declining as a percentage of Cohasset's budget for at least a decade. New gifts to the Cohasset Library Trust will join old gifts to assure the continued quality of this town treasure. A gift of $5,000 to the Library Trust earns listing on the new Endowment Wall in the Library Entry.

McDonald headed for Hall of Fame

Special Olympian to join elite group

Jessie MacDonald, a Special Olympics Massachusetts athlete and resident of Cohasset.

Jessie MacDonald, a Special Olympics Massachusetts athlete and resident of Cohasset, will be inducted into the 2008 Special Olympics Massachusetts Hall of Fame on April 5th at a Black tie event celebrating the 40th Anniversary of the Special Olympics movement.

MacDonald has trained and competed in alpine skiing, aquatics, athletics, basketball, candlepin bowling, fishing, golf, power lifting, sailing, soccer, and softball. She's also recently taken up snowboarding as well. She is extremely competitive and takes her sport very seriously. She trains hard and sets high standards for herself.

MacDonald's passion and commitment knows no bounds. She can dead lift 300 pounds, squat 285 pounds, and bench press 150 pounds. Of that, she says, "It makes me kind of proud." A recent headline about MacDonald, "Powered By Passion" personifies her commitment and it is with this passion that MacDonald won four gold medals at the 2006 National Games in Iowa.

An active athlete and fundraiser for Special Olympics, MacDonald has jumped into the frigid February waters for the last five years at the annual Passion Plunge, Special Olympics largest annual fundraiser. She also represents Special Olympics South Section as a Global Messenger, a Special Olympics athlete trained in public speaking. MacDonald also assists coaches with younger athletes, organizing of competitions, purchasing of equipment and uniforms. To top it all off, MacDonald holds a full time job at the YMCA in Hanover.

MacDonald has taken advantage of the many innovative opportunities that Special Olympics offers. In addition, MacDonald contributes immensely to Special Olympics experience in both sports and heart. She moves from sport to sport within Special Olympics without much fanfare and even with her glowing success and great athletic talents, she is humble and soft spoken.

MacDonald is one of 11 people who will be formally inducted at the 2008 Let Me Be Brave 40th Anniversary Gala to benefit Special Olympics Massachusetts, being held at the Gordon Indoor Track and Tennis Center at Harvard University. The event is a black tie and sneakers dinner and program highlighting the 2008 Hall of Fame.

The evening will also include a tribute to our founder, Eunice Kennedy Shriver, and we will honor Jim Brett, President of the New England Council and Margaret McKenna, President Emeritus of Lesley University and now President of the Wal-Mart Foundation. The event is being co-chaired by Joannie Jaxtimer, SVP Community Relations, The Bank of New York Mellon and Peter Meade of Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

ASP LUNCH!

Hello Cohasset. How is everyone doing this week? For all of you are planning to attend, don't forget Town Meeting tomorrow (Saturday, March 29). The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project Group will be serving breakfast and lunch items there. Please stop by and help support our fundraising efforts for this year's trip to Kentucky.

I don't know about all of you reading this but I know that I for one am so ready for Springtime weather! The purple flowers of some kind have poked through in many yards and places around town, which is so refreshing to see, I just wish that the daytime weather would catch up. One thing that I do know and see as I am walking around town is that the kiddos are outside enjoying the weather warm or cold. With that being said, we all as adults need to remember to watch and slow down a bit as it does get more and more into spring as sometimes these little kids that we all know and love so much, forget the rules of the road. It also is a great time for us to have a springtime talk with them at family time in our homes and remind them of all the rules, especially those of the trains, tracks etc. Bikes, skateboards, roller blades and more are all ready to be used and we want everyone to be safe. Have a great week Cohasset.

COLLEGE ADVICE

A presentation is being held on April 1st, from 9 -10:30am in the High School auditorium. Everyone is invited! This is a great panel of speakers including people from Harvard, Wheaton, Northeastern and B.C. and is a discussion all parents facing the college process will find invaluable. You will learn how to find a college that is right for your teen, how to make the most of your campus visit or interview and how to make your application standout. You will hear from students and parents (who have already been through the process) what they learned and wished they had known beforehand. If you have questions or need more information, please contact: sfilbey@comcast.netor call 781-383-3525. This is a great opportunity for those who are at this time in their teen's lives.

HONORS

Congratulations go out to Isabelle P. Bertolami who has earned dean's list honors at Saint Joseph's University for the Fall 2007 semester. Students must achieve a grade point average of 3.5 or above, a B or greater in all their classes, and complete at least 15 credits for this honor. Great job Isabelle.

Also receiving accolades from her school is Caitlin T. Sanchez from here in town. Caitlin attends University of Massachusetts Dartmouth and was named to the dean's list with a grade point average of 3.2 or higher out of a possible 4 for the Fall 2007 semester.

Nice work Caitlin.

I have one more student to let you all know about and he is doing so well. Great work to Sam Game for achieving honors at Philips Exeter Academy. This is great to hear about Sam.

MS SOCIETY

Enjoy local art and support the MS Society! Stop by the new Home Center Sotheby's real estate office in the Village to view an exhibition of paintings by four local artists: JoAnne Chittick, Lisa Marder, Ann Musto, and Diana Rousseau. There will be an opening reception on Friday, April 4, from 6 to 8 p.m.; the show will hang through May, and everyone is encouraged to go into the gallery during daily office hours to see — and purchase — these beautiful paintings. On April 4 and April 12 — the day of the Cohasset MS Walk – 30 percent of proceeds of sales will be donated by the artists to the MS Society.

OUR WORLD

The Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum is getting ready to release some great new programs for children in Drama , Art and Music, Movement, Nite Time Happenings and so much more. To check out the programs and museum information, please go to www.ourworldcdgm.org or call 781-383-3198.

ART CLASSES

South Shore Art Center is accepting registrations for its Spring adult and children's art classes, including classes in photography (both 35mm and digital), ceramics, printmaking, drawing, watercolor, oils, furniture painting and sculpture. Classes are available for absolute beginners to accomplished artists looking to hone a skill or try something different. Workshops include Academic Portrait Workshop, in the all-prima (all-in-one sitting) approach, on Saturday April 12th and 13th and Mosaic Workshop with artist Lisa Houck, on Sunday, May 11th.

Children's classes include an April vacation week class for grades 1-4, a class in marionette making, and studio classes for middle and high school students. Registrations are also being taken for the Art Center's popular summer Art Afternoons; six week-long classes for students in grades 1-4. Each week focuses on a different theme such as Native America, Wild About Animals, Art of Ancient Civilizations and Oceans. For more information or to register for classes, contact the Art Center at 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

SPELLING BEE

The Cohasset Education Foundation is very excited to be offering its 1st Annual Children's Spelling Bee fundraiser on Sunday, April 13, 2008. All children in Grades 2 to 5 are welcome to participate in this fun, community event. Each team is made up of 3 children in the same grade. Team members could be from class, a sports team, or a Cohasset resident in another school. Registration, including a tee shirt, is $25 per speller. Forms can be downloaded at www.cohasseteducation.org. Remember to register by March 28th.

OUTDOOR HUMOR

Michael Tougias, author of 14 books, presents a narrated "outdoor humor" slide presentation at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Thursday, April 3 at 7 pm. The presentation is based on his book "There's A Porcupine In My Outhouse" which won "Best Nature Book of 2003" as awarded by the Independent Publishers Association of America. The book and slide show are based on misadventures on Tougias' early years of exploring New England's backcountry and at his remote cabin in Northern Vermont.

This is a Cohasset Reads Together event. Federally funded with LSTA funds through the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners.

That is all for this week. Please send in all of your news to me no later than TUESDAYS by 5 pm.

Never at a loss for words

Hedlund's radio talk show is a hit

By Liz Fuller
CORRESPONDENT

State Sen. Robert Hedlund is basking in the afterglow after wrapping up his first year as a radio talk-show host. Hedlund has been broadcasting "Monday Night Talk" live Mondays from 6 to 8 p.m. on Marshfield-based 95.9 WATD. "We recently had an anniversary party," Hedlund says. "It's been fun."

The Weymouth Republican says he has always been interested in radio in varying degrees, especially the music side. During a campaign several years back, he met a man who had worked at WATD in the past and Hedlund talked about his interest in radio and about an idea he had for a music radio show. He met with Ed Perry, owner of WATD, to pitch his idea and after 45 minutes of discussion, Perry was not interested. No sooner had Perry dismissed the show idea, he decided to give Hedlund a chance anyway. Hedlund hosted a show called "The Rock Vault," but under the pseudo name of Cliff Stone. "I didn't want to make a fool of myself," Hedlund explains. He hosted the show for about eight months, one night a week.

He has also done some fill-in work at WRKO for Howie Carr, Todd Feinberg, and Tom Finneran. "It's been good practice," Hedlund says, of filling-in at WRKO. "I learned a lot." Hedlund says it's a different situation at WRKO than WATD. "WRKO is 100 percent talk," Hedlund says, while WATD is a full-service station. But, he says, he has learned so much by hosting his own show as well. "I learn from my listeners and constituents," he says. "I get their input, which helps me to do a better job."

Hedlund states that sometimes callers can get fiery with him because he openly says that, as a Republican, he doesn't support the war. "I'm not big on banging the drum for the war," he says.

While Hedlund's Monday night show is primarily a political show, not every discussion is serious. "You know," he says. "I'm obviously doing my job all week. Sometimes I want to depart from politics."

"They usually let me make my points, though, before they start yelling."
— State Sen. Robert Hedlund of Monday Night Talk

Hedlund describes a visit he took last year to Washington, D.C. for a transportation seminar at the White House. As he and a colleague were doing some sightseeing prior to the seminar, they came across a homeless man outside the White House who was holding a sign that said he was running for president. Intrigued, Hedlund found himself speaking to the man, discussing his background and his political beliefs. "I found him to be extremely intelligent," Hedlund recalls. "I told him about my radio show, which, ironically, the first show was to be on Presidents Day. I figured that since he was running for president, I should have him on the air."

Hedlund had the man, Rick Hohensse, call in to his show and he's been calling in to his WATD show every week since. "He's only missed one week," Hedlund says. He says that Hohensse goes to the Zoo Bar in D.C. where the bartender lets him use his cell phone to make his weekly call. Hedlund wants to be clear, however, that he does not exploit Hohensse in any way. "Like I said, he is an intelligent guy. And he is hilarious. Sometimes I send him on a mission," Hedlund says, chuckling. "One time I sent him to Delahunt's office [Congressman William Delahunt] and he barged in there telling them that Hedlund was on the phone!"

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, D-Weymouth, recently completed his first year as host of WATD's "Monday Night Talk" airing live Mondays from 6-8 p.m.

Hedlund has had his share of "passionate" callers who like to challenge him, but claims that he likes it when people start yelling. "It's good that way," he says. "They usually let me make my points, though, before they start yelling." He also has some eccentric callers, such as one man outside of Hedlund's district who calls in to the show, often drunk. "He's not adversarial," Hedlund says. He has another regular caller who sounds like Wolfman Jack. Another interesting character is "the guy from Boston." "He's a 360 pound guy who works as a Massport parking attendant," Hedlund says. "He has this web site where he does these video rants. He's had over a million hits. He's been on Jay Leno, Neil Cavuto [Fox Business News] had him on twice, Chronicle has interviewed him, and Fox25 has hired him to do interviews. But we discovered him. We had him first."

Hedlund's all-time favorite show was when he had sports writer, Bob Ryan, from the Boston Globe in studio. Hedlund fondly recalls Ryan speaking to his English class his junior year at Hingham High School. Since then, Hedlund has been a fan. "We just went back and forth talking about sports. It was baseball season and I love baseball. I could talk about baseball all day. We had no set format and we just played off each other. We had trivia questions and prizes. It was great!" Hedlund then asked Ryan if he'd like to get a bite to eat after the show and their talking "tennis match" continued for two more hours.

Perry of WATD describes the success of "Monday Night Talk" as a "pleasant surprise." He said WATD tried a political talk show about a decade ago but it did not catch on. Perry points out that Hedlund pays for his talk-show time. "He is a sitting politician and if we did not do that we would be inundated."

Perry says Hedlund's personality and his knowledge of the South Shore and Beacon Hill and his ability to attract knowledgeable guests contribute to the show's success. "With Bob, what you see is what you get," Perry says. "The show has really taken off. It's been a fun thing for Bob because he likes doing it."

Perry says other politicians have approached him about hosting programs. Scheduling can be an issue. He says each request is carefully evaluated.

Reflecting on the past year, Hedlund says that doing the radio show has been a real learning experience. "I'll continue to do the radio show for as long as Ed [Perry] allows me to. "I really enjoy it," he says.

To call in and participate in Monday Night Talk, call 781-837-4900 between 6 and 8 p.m. on Mondays.

Worley to pass the baton to Carroll

"Following the interviews, it was the unanimous opinion of the interview team that Ted Carroll was the best candidate for the position," Griffin said.

On Griffin's recommendation, selectmen waived their 15-day veto period allowed under the Town Manager Act, and approved the appointment.

Carroll, who is currently Recreation Administrator for Hanover, also served as program manager for Hingham Recreation and director of operations at the South Shore Sports Center in Hingham.

In his application, Carroll said his enthusiasm, organizational skills, and profound interest in the field made him an excellent candidate.

"I was mentored by outgoing Cohasset Recreation Director Jack Worley, and would be honored to fill his position," he wrote.

Carroll said while it is a dream come true, coming home to direct the department where he started 26 years ago is not something he is taking lightly.

Griffin said during his interview, Carroll offered ideas on how to increase the number of recreation programs for all ages, how to modernize the department through specialized software, and how to work with local leagues and other organizations in the use of fields and other facilities. He also wants to improve the relationship between the schools and recreation department including initiatives to increase the use of school facilities for local recreation programs.

"I received numerous letters of support for Ted's appointment as Recreation Director, including letters from school and police officials, area recreation directors and others," Griffin stated in a memo to selectmen. "I also had several residents stop by the office to express their support for Ted's appointment."

Selectmen Chairman Gary Vanderweil gave Carroll high marks. "I have known Ted for years and he is a great candidate," Vanderweil said.

Carroll is also respected by his peers. Barry DeBlasio, Recreation Director for the Town of Plymouth, describes Carroll as bright and motivated.

"I have known Ted for more than four years, mainly through his involvement with the Massachusetts Recreation and Park Association," DeBlasio said. "He is a bright and motivated individual that truly loves the field of recreation. Ted had always told me that his dream job would to someday take over for his mentor and become the Recreation Director for the Town of Cohasset.

"I guess dreams really do come true. I think the town made a great choice by a hiring a true Recreation professional," he said.

Carroll said while it is a dream come true, coming home to direct the department where he started 26 years ago is not something he is taking lightly.

"Recreation has been my calling since I attended recreation programs in town," he said. However, he said it is bittersweet to replace Worley who has been his mentor and friend. "The dedication and commitment I have, contributed to everything I have done in life and was learned by watching Jack," Carroll said.

Griffin said the field of applicants was excellent.

"It was a tough choice," Griffin said. "But based on his experience and excitement about future programs (he was our choice)."

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer made the motion to waive the veto period, which received unanimous support from the board.

Carroll is going to start about May 1. He will be paid $64,000, which is what the town budgeted for the position next fiscal year.

RELAY CORNER

Relay For Life team captains needed

Relay for Life is the signature fundraiser of the American Cancer Society. Participants raise money by personally collecting donations and organizing group fundraisers prior to or at the event. The money goes towards cancer research, patient services, advocacy and education. It also provides hope to those how have cancer and their family and friends that a cure is available, it provides hope that cancer can be detected in its early stages and it provides hope tha tcancer is eradicated in our life time.

The Hingham/Hull/Cohasset and Scituate Relay will be held on June 13th and 14th organizations clubs, family, friends and coworkers form teams of at least 8-15 people and gather at Cohasset High School on the 13th.

Members of the team take turns walking around the track for the duration of the event. An important part of Relay is honoring and remembering those people in our lives who have faced cancer. Each Relay invites cancer survivors in the community to walk a special Survivors Lap.

Another focal point of each Relay is the Luminaria Ceremony, held after dark, where candles are sponsored and lit in honor and memory of our loved ones who have battled this disease.

Part of what makes Relay for Life special is its atmosphere — the sense of community, camaraderie and hope that permeates the event from start to finish. Hope has become the catchword of Relay, because hope is what it's all about; the hope that one day we will be free from the fear of this terrible disease, that our children will grow up in a world where cancer is no longer fatal. Relay is a time to do something about a danger that seems so much bigger than us, and to know that we are actually making a difference. It is a time to reflect, to remember those who have been lost and those who can still be saved. And it is also a lot of fun to be there with friends and take part in the activities.

For information on how you can start a team contact Harry St.Onge at 781-383-9465 orst.onge@comcast.net. Team captains are need.

Antique Appraisal Day is Saturday

Skinner Inc. Appraisers are coming to Cohasset again for the second Antique Appraisal Day. Mark calendars for Saturday, March 29, to bring antiques to be appraised. For large pieces, several good photographs can be used by the appraiser. Be sure to include photos of any special markings, numbers or other details that may assist in the appraisal process.

This event is sponsored by the Friends of Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs and will take place at St. Anthony's Parish Center, 10 Summer St., , from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Appraisals are $10 per item, or $25 for three items. Excluded items include coins, stamps, jewelry and musical instruments. As people had to be turned away from the last appraisal day, a maximum of three items per individual will be allowed.

Snacks and refreshments will be available to enjoy while waiting to meet with the appraiser.

For more information, call Cohasset Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112 or John Campbell, president of the Friends at 617-909-5687.

Music from the Gaslight Era

On Sunday, April 6th, from 2 to 4 p.m., the Cohasset Historical Society will offer a special program titled "Popular Music of the Gaslight Era" by musician and educator, John Root.

Root, both a vocalist and instrumentalist, presents programs on popular music from the first half of the twentieth century for audiences of all ages. He brings a diverse repertoire of instrumental and vocal musical styles to his performances and demonstrates how song lyrics offer insights into the customs and values of a bygone period in our history.

Through the music, we learn how our country's multicultural diversity at the turn of the previous century created unique musical styles that continue to delight and inspire audiences around the world. The cost of this exceptional program is $10.00 per person and includes light refreshment.

All are invited to the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St. for an afternoon of most enjoyable entertainment.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Good citizens

The Town of Cohasset has been lucky over the years to have citizens willing to serve.

In the town's case, some of those have stayed "on board" for a very long time.

Two, long-time elected officials Robert "Bob" Sturdy of the Planning Board and Gary Vanderweil of the Board of Selectmen, and formerly of the Sewer Commission, are calling it a day. Neither man is seeking reelection.

Both have served for more years than they like to count.

However, in doing so – they have provided a consistency and institutional memory that are second to none.

While having "new blood" can be a good thing – the value of having that balance with experience and a thorough knowledge of the town and how we got from there to here cannot be understated.

We know that Bob does not want any accolades or recognition at Saturday's Town Meeting when traditionally proclamations honoring officials who are stepping down or retiring, are read.

Gary could not stop smiling on Monday – which was his last "regular" selectmen's meeting. As chairman, he ran a tight ship. Meetings started and ended on time, for the most part. That all went out the window on Monday with a beefy agenda and the controversial Treat's Pond discussion still at the forefront. Gary noted that going forward, he was going to have the luxury of watching the board's meetings on cable from his own living room.

We know there are many others to thank that we have probably inadvertently left out over the years.

So we would like to take the opportunity now to thank all who serve.

This week we take our hats off to Bob and Gary, who have gone that extra mile over the years to do what they thought was best for their hometown. We hope that they will continue to share their expertise whether from the floor of Town Meeting, in the audience of a public hearing or governmental meeting, or as a valued advisor should an official or citizen seek their counsel.

Town Meeting

Saturday's Town Meeting is not going to be dominated by budget issues, as is often the case.

However, that does not mean it will not be full of interesting debate on the range of articles – or items of business – before the assembly.

Apart from articles that extended sewer service in town, we cannot recall an environmental issue like Treat's Pond so likely to dominate a Town Meeting.

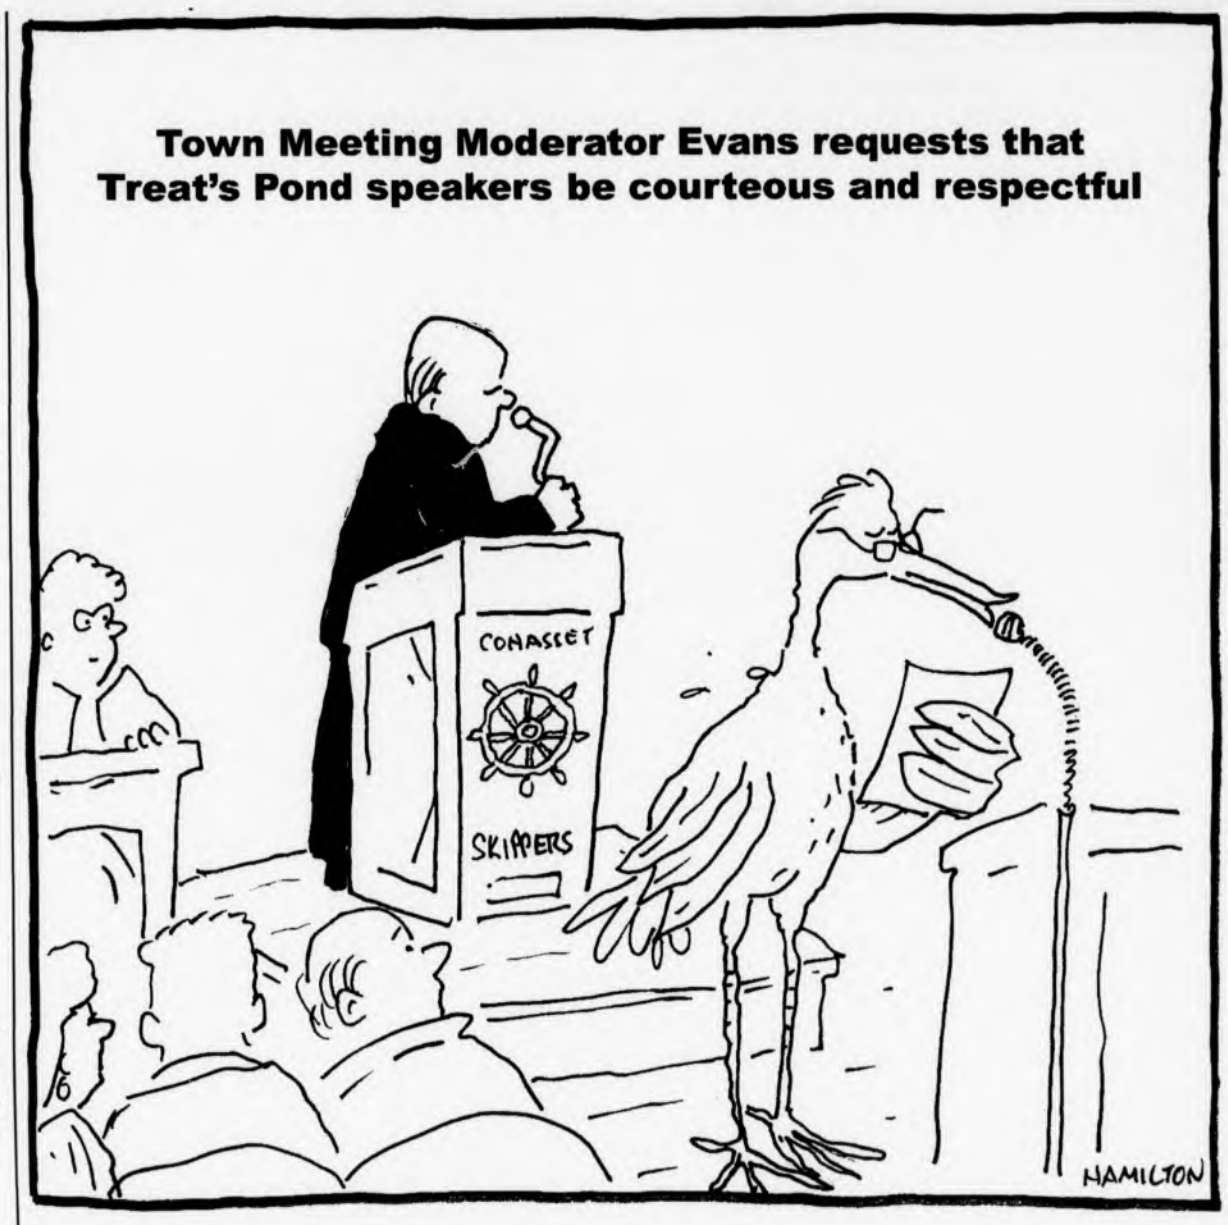
The nice thing about Town Meeting is that both sides are presented and there will be lots of debate and explanation. Therefore, anyone who may still be confused about the complex issue should find the discussion enlightening.

There are also other articles that are not routine. A proposed stormwater bylaw, wind turbines, and establishing a Housing Trust – come to mind.

We know that most of you will sit Town Meeting out and leave the governing of the town and setting the course for its future to the few hundred that will attend Saturday and make the decisions.

We sincerely hope that some "new" Town Meeting attendees will be interested enough to attend and will then be transformed into Town Meeting "regulars."

As Journalists we are government "groupies" and have always found Town Meetings interesting and even fun.



If you have not given them a try – then attend Saturday. We hope to see you there.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Little pond causes big splash!

TO THE EDITOR

Who would have thought such a little pond could cause such a big splash? The tempest that is Treat's has dominated the news more than any other story has in the last few years, it seems to me.

A few random thoughts:

Why would we consider putting yet more storm water into the main harbor? As it is Bassing's is unsafe for swimming on a depressingly regular basis. What about the silting effects on the channel that a 42-inch inside diameter (which would be a 48 inch outside diameter) pipe would have? Lobster cars currently have a high loss of catch because of the fresh water levels in the harbor, adding more isn't going to help.

The importance of eelgrass in a healthy marine environment is unquestioned. Putting a pipe through one of the largest beds of eelgrass in the harbor is absurd to say the least, particularly when one of the goals of this project is to create a salt marsh. If clams are almost non-existent in the harbor, how are they going to thrive in Treat's? I'm not sure about you, but to risk damage to Whale's Meadow on the off chance that Treat's will turn into a salt marsh seems a bit dicey. And, if Treat's is turned into a salt marsh, what happens to the freshwater plants and animals? Trick or Treat!

The cost of this project is estimated to be in the area of $1,700,000. The Town is being asked for $300,000, and the theory is that the state will come up with the rest. Treat's pond is private property. The public gets to foot the bill, what a deal! Trick or Treat! The cost estimates by the way come from the good folks at the Army Corps of Engineers. When you sell something it's always good to have a flashy slogan. I think the ACE should consider "If you like the levee system in New Orleans, you'll love Treat's Pond!" or something catchy like that.

This is basically a drainage issue dressed up as a salt marsh restoration or creation depending on whom you talk to. You don't have to take a very long walk to see what a real flooding problem is all about. Just go to Jacob's Meadow when the treatment plant is over capacity. I think that raw sewerage would trump pretty much any other liquid you could hope to get flooded with. Trick or Treat, wipe your feet!

Let's take a town wide approach to the issue of flooding. Let's see what the result of the upcoming study tells us. Extend the existing pipe on Sandy Cove by 20 to 40 feet, and keep the pipe cleared. Enforce the easement the Town has to maintain the pipe. Let's see what the effect of the sewer project on Atlantic Avenue has on the ability for the ground to absorb storm water. Let's not spend $1,700,000 and destroy Treat's Pond in the process.

Let's vote no on Article 22 at Town Meeting.

Support Treat's Pond project

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

"Drainage vote opens floodgate of protest," trumpeted the Boston Globe on March 13. "Questions raised on Treat's Pond," wrote a local citizen in the Cohasset Mariner letters to the editor on March 14. In another Mariner issue appeared the headline "Pond issue is draining – Controversy headed for Town Meeting."

One might think that the Treat's Pond issue is ripping apart the community. I want to believe that this is not the case. I am not Cohasset born. I am a resident because of my wife. My home for most of my life, with the exception of a few years during WWII, has been Corning, New York, a town of 11,000 people.

A few years ago, we were hit by Hurricane Agnes. It was pretty bleak in this part of upstate, but the flooding somehow seemed to bring us together. With so many needs, one nearby city literally split apart and developed a "combat mindset." We didn't.

A small town is special. You know almost everyone. You care what happens to your neighbor. You care about town values, the way things are progressing, the opportunities for kids as you look over the next hill at their future.

Cohasset has a special life-giving feature. It stays positive; it stays ahead – the school system – the new Paul Pratt library – the reinstalled train system to Boston – the Historical Society – the Art Center – the Jacobs Meadow and Straits Pond projects to abate flooding and protect the environment – so many things that make Cohasset the star of the South Shore.

And here comes still another project – Treat's Pond – sponsored by Congressman Bill Delahunt and backed by our State Sen. Bob Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley.

I know that politics is a strange business, having been in it for a few years. You find yourself pulled every which way. For example, the project might be questionable; it's too much money; wrong priority; poor timing; can't we wait – the list goes on. But these men have gone out of their way with all the budget pressures in Washington and Boston in hopes of helping Cohasset by providing Federal and State funds with almost 90 percent of the cost to do two things – first, to resurrect a dying, polluted pond and second, to help solve the ruinous flooding on Atlantic Avenue.

That's the good news. The bad news is that the federally appropriated money is time sensitive. If not used this year, it will be transferred, according to Congressman Delahunt, to another area. That could be a costly move since the problems would still exist; the solutions in the future then would fall 100 percent on the town.

The clouds of sub prime-initiated national recession hover over everyone's head these days, yet Cohasset appears to stand against the weather, signaling its traditional optimism that history tells us describes all other successful communities.

I am grateful to be a small part of this community and hope that you will support this project.

Numerous items on Greenbush to-do list

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

We hear an occasional comment regarding why we are still at Town Hall. After all, the train is up and running. So we'd like to shed some light on this weighty question. Yes, the train is running, but there are numerous things that still need to be completed by the MBTA. Our job, as always, is to represent the Town and act as an interface with the Greenbush project. As of today, we have an "official" open item list with the Greenbush project. We'd like to give you sampling overview of the items that make up this 30-some item list.

- The Town Parking Lot has never been completed. This is an MBTA commitment and it needs to be finished, especially a sidewalk at Depot Court, parking next to the Teen Center, an electrical wiring issue, final striping, and other issues.
- A turnaround needs to be constructed on Spring St. at the railroad so that fire trucks can turn around easily. Interestingly, we have mocked up the plans that the MBTA created in a local parking lot and found that our ladder truck cannot turn around in the space designed. This needs to be resolved.
- On Rocky Lane there is an issue with storm drainage in the street and the guardrail is in the wrong position that precludes our ability to construct a sidewalk.
- The MBTA has removed signs on North Main Street for Cohasset Rotary Club and St. Stephen's Church. They both need to be replaced.
- The mounting for the wrought iron fence in the central village alongside the tracks is cracking and will not last through several more winters. This needs to be addressed.
- A good deal of the grass, trees and bushes planted alongside of the tracks last summer have died. They all need to be replaced.
- Part of the sidewalk on Pleasant Street has cracked. It needs to be replaced.
- The MBTA had committed to fence all "inhabited areas." Some residential areas that are inhabited are not fenced. This needs to be completed.

This is only a partial list, but you get the idea. Wednesday of this week we had a chance to sit down and have an excellent discussion with the project on the "open items list." We'll fill you in more later. The Town needs to make sure that it gets the things it was promised and that the workmanship of the construction left in our Town will stand the test of time.

We've also mentioned that from time to time the Town Manager has asked us to get involved in other engineering projects and to provide technical advice. Among some of the more recent tasks are:

- The addition of a small amount of sidewalk to connect the Border Street Bridge to the newly constructed Border Street sidewalk.
- Completion of the sidewalk from Lower King Street and North Main Street to the train station.
- Working with the Town DPW to lend engineering expertise to their maintenance projects.
- Work with the Little Harbor Project to provide support for the storm drainage portion and other aspects as requested. Also, to provide some Project communication via the Cohasset Mariner.

Long-term, look-ahead schedule for the Little Harbor Sewer Project

Little Harbor Project – The contractor for the Little Harbor Sewer, Water and drainage project, L&M Holdings, has developed a long-term look-ahead schedule. We thought that you might be interested in seeing it. However, we must present it with some MAJOR caveats. Like all construction schedules it is subject to change. We already know that the Town has requested that the work in the area of North Main St. and the Common be postponed until fall so that it doesn't conflict with events such as the Art Festival, the Triathlon and Music Circus. So, please take this schedule with "a grain of salt." But it will give you an idea of the work yet to be done in the next seven months and the approximate time for the amount of work to be done at each location.

The notorious Fung Wah bus

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

A friend of mine went to New York the other day, a trip which is not really newsy enough to write about except that she didn't fly; she didn't take the train; she went by bus – the notorious Fung Wah bus.

If you haven't been reading the Herald lately, those are the buses that are continually bursting into flames on hot days on the Mass Turnpike or breaking down in the passing lane on the Merritt Parkway in Connecticut.

Those are the ones where you ask the driver, "What time do we get to New York?" and he tells you, "I don't know. We've never made it before."

What attracted my friend to the Fung Wah bus was the cost of a ticket, $15 one way, for a no-frill ride to the Big Apple, a frill being defined as engine maintenance and a license for the driver. If the bus breaks down, you get out and push.

But none of that is true, my friend reported, as she returned home (for $15 via the same Fung Wah bus) from the big adventure that had me nervously watching the news on television for a full weekend waiting for word of the big crash on the Pike.

The only difference from Greyhound ($60 round trip) and Amtrak ($118 round trip) was the 15-minute rest stop at a McDonalds for food and other services and finally being dumped with luggage curbside on a Manhattan street.

And then there was that office door marked "Fung Wah" through which none of the passengers were permitted to pass as they waited on a street in New York's Chinatown to board the bus for home. No waiting room for Fung Wah riders.

Fung Wah Bus Transportation, Inc., was founded 10 years ago by a Chinese immigrant and, in spite of its well-publicized mishaps, it must be doing something right because even the biggies like Greyhound are getting into the act.

Greyhound is backing something called BoltBus, which plans to offer at least one seat on each bus for $1 (plus a 50-cent booking fee) and the rest of the vehicle scaled by how far in advance the seats are booked.

And Coach USA, Inc., is promising MegaBus, again with one seat per bus for $1 and no seats costing more than $14 with free WiFi and eight video screens to show movies on each bus. MegaBus plans to begin service May 30.

Think of it, a dollar for a ticket to New York. Just getting into a taxicab in Quincy will cost you 75 cents and you haven't even left the curb. And a dollar's worth of gas in your SUV will get you from Braintree to Weymouth – on a good traffic day.

Maybe some Chinese immigrant will come along to open the Fung Wah taxi company or the Fung Wah filling station and we won't have to take out a second mortgage to grab a cab or pump enough gas to get all the way to Hingham.

Sewer candidates

Cohasset's TV talk show, Our Town with co-hosts Pat Martin and Mark DeGiacomo is featuring candidates for the Sewer Commission, Wayne Sawchuk and Jim Dow. The candidates discuss the current issues before the Sewer Commission and offer their thoughts on how they would serve on the board.

Spelling bee

The Cohasset Education Foundation is offering its first annual Children's Spelling Bee fundraiser on Sunday, April 13. All children in grades two to five are welcome to participate in this fun, community event. Each team is made up of three children in the same grade. Team members could be from class, a sports team, or a Cohasset resident in another school.

Registration, including a tee shirt, is $25 per speller. Forms can be downloaded at www.cohasseteducation.org.

HEALTH NOTES

Solving water problems is costly

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The report analyzed the effects of the three alternatives for restoring Treats Pond to the status of a salt marsh.

On Monday, I received a call from one of the Selectmen. He said he had seen a report of the Army Engineers related to Treats Pond and he sent me a file of material. Among other things, the file contained a memorandum prepared by Camp Dresser McKee, a respected local engineering firm for the Unites States Army Corps of Engineers, New England District for their project called "Treat's Pond Coastal Wetland Ecosystem Restoration, Cohasset, Massachusetts." June 2006.

To my mind, it was a good document, containing the only technical data taken on Treats Pond. The report analyzed the effects of the three alternatives for restoring Treats Pond to the status of a salt marsh.

The one thing that the memorandum/report did conclusively was to demonstrate fairly clearly that draining Treats pond twice a day as would happen by opening it to the coastal waters as an estuary, would have little effect on the Mass Bay estuarine environment. Treats Pond is the veritable drop in the bucket. Whatever the plan for Treats Pond turns out to be, storm water drainage aside, environmentally, Treats Pond isn't a culprit.

The report cites 2005 Board of Health data about Treats pond as having high fecal coliform and cites figures like 8800 colonies per hundred milliliters. We know there's raw sewage about when the values become 30,000 or higher. It's a sign that septic systems are leaking into the Pond — justification for the sewer now under construction that will provide service to the entire area. It should be noted that sometimes such high counts may be found in catch basins during and after rain events. Depending on when the last rain event was, catch basins can have values of 15,000 or more. And 40 minutes after the beginning of a heavy rain, one can find puddles of stormwater with 10,000 colonies per hundred milliliters. Bacteria colonies grow and multiply when water temperature is over 43°f. So, like it or not, nature is full of growing bacteria and many other critters.

So, all the rhetoric about storm water and pollution aside, what we do know is that storm water and flooding in increasing amounts is frequently making homes in some areas in Town uninhabitable. Accordingly, the Town is obligated to do something about managing storm water. The Town is also obligated to manage another pollution threat: sewer system infiltration and inflow (I&I) In Cohasset, where sewer pipes are frequently inundated by groundwater, a condition caused by diurnal tide cycles, we often can find high bacteria readings near cracked and broken sewer pipes. Towns, which have aggressive programs in which sewer systems are modernized, have considerably fewer problems with illness coming from bacterial contamination. For almost all of its history, Cohasset has done little about the twin ogres of Storm water and I&I.

It's been estimated that the cost of managing storm water and I&I would be eight to $13 million over 10 years. So, we have a problem, which is somehow going to cost us more than $1 million a year for the foreseeable future. A rich suburban Texas town I once visited had a coastline littered with large upscale homes that were sitting out in the water completely uninhabitable because of a phenomenon called subsidence. These homes represented a loss of real estate value of millions of dollars. We are now on the threshold of much the same problem, from a different source, in Cohasset.

There's little question that the plans cited in the Army Corps of Engineers memorandum/report could be used to solve some of the storm water problems on Atlantic Avenue, but it will take a coordinated plan and a good deal more additional money to relieve the flooding that now exists there. People ask if we should take the Army's help. That's like getting a ride from a stranger when one doesn't have the bus fare.

SENIOR SCENE

The following special events are planning by the Council on Elder Affairs, 3 N. Main St. Call 781-383-9112 for more information.

Saturday, March 29 is Antique Appraisal Day from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

Tuesday, April 2, 11 a.m. to noon, Poetry Fest with Cohasset students and seniors sharing verse and lunch.

Monday, April 14 at 9 a.m., Cohasset Golden Care Pancake breakfasts return and will be offered the second Monday of every month.

Wednesday, April 16 from 11 a.m. to noon. Connie Curran, social worker from South Shore VNA will present "Caring for Someone with Memory Impairment." Lunch will follow the presentation. Cost is $2.50.

Monday, April 21, Patriots Day – Center will be closed.

Tuesday, April 22, Volunteer Appreciation Lunch at the Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage at noon catered by Arthur Roebuck. No lunch at center. Volunteer Appreciation week is April 27—May 3, but our volunteers are so great we are celebrating for two weeks.

Wednesday, April 30 from 11 a.m. to noon, Hingham Physical Therapy will present "Fall Prevention" and will provide a delicious lunch.

Tuesday, May 6, Visit to the New England Quilt Museum

Wednesday, May 7, Annual Mother's Day luncheon

Big issues on table for annual Town Meeting Saturday flows from the people. It's everyone pitching in to make the town work," said Vanderweil.

Like most Town Meeting regulars, Vanderweil is hoping to finish the town's business in one fell swoop. Continuing into a Monday night session is never desirable, said Vanderweil. Getting a quorum early will be key to finishing in one day, said Town Manager Bill Griffin.

"We'll be hard pressed to finish in one day," said Vanderweil. But, efforts are being implemented to ensure Town Meeting is as efficient as possible.

"A critical component in making Town Meeting work is to show respect for others," said Town Moderator Dan Evans in a phone interview. An efficient meeting is one of the ways voters can show courtesy to each other, "it is a burden and a responsibility to come to Town Meeting," and voters should be aware of everyone's sacrifice of a spring Saturday to be at Town Meeting, he said. Without sacrificing the people's voice, Evans hopes to facilitate an efficient one-day meeting.

A lunch break, which in the past has consumed about an hour of the day, is being replaced with shorter breaks. The Appalachia Service Project will be offering food for lunch and snacks right outside the gymnasium so voters can briefly leave the meeting to stay nourished while doing the town's business. Proceeds from the sales will benefit the upcoming ASP trip.

In addition, if Town Meeting allows, Evans hopes the Community Preservation Committee article (article 6), which contains 11 sub-articles, be taken up as one rather than as separate items up for debate.

Evans said he would allow discussion to go as late at 5 or 6p.m. if it seemed possible the meeting could wrap up in one day. If all business cannot be completed in one day, Town Meeting will be continued until Monday, March 31 at 7p.m.

The 25 articles presented in the Warrant, or Town Meeting agenda, will be tackled in the order they appear, unless otherwise directed by the Town Moderator or Town Meeting. Warrants were mailed out to households last week and extras will be available on Saturday.

Each article will be taken up one at a time, a motion will be made, and votes will typically be taken on a voice basis.

Article 1 requests Town Meeting to accept the reports of the Town Officers that are printed in the Annual Town Report for calendar year 2007. Copies are available in the Town Clerk's office and the Office of the Board of Selectmen.

Article 2 is an opportunity for town boards and committees to present a report directly to the voters at Town Meeting. As of the printing of the Town Warrant, the Board of Selectmen did not request any specific reports. Any recommended reports will take place at the Annual Town Meeting.

The Town Budget will be reviewed in Article 3. A tax levy of $26,502,911 is projected for fiscal 2009, an increase of 4.02 percent over the current year. Of special note is that this budget is the second consecutive year with a "no override" budget. The percent increase for an average tax bill (based on a property value of $825,000) will be 2.26 percent, or a $198 increase. Griffin will propose an operating budget of $36,374,463, a 2.79 percent increase over fiscal 2008. The school department budget is recommended at $14,316,397, an increase of 4.6 percent, or $629,997 over the current year.

Article 4 requests the town to fund the fiscal 2009 cost items of a collective bargaining agreement. However, no agreement has been made between the town and any of the town's five unions. Since no agreement has been reached, both the Board of Selectmen and the Advisory Committee advise indefinite postponement.

Capital improvement budget typically stirs up debate on the floor of Town Meeting. This time around, only one capital expenditure is proposed. Article 5 asks the town to allocate $50,000 to fund additional design engineering for the West Corner culvert project. The project is a collaborative effort between the towns of Hull, Hingham and Cohasset.

Next up is a meaty article with over $700,000 in recommended expenditures from the Community Preservation Committee (Article 6). A total of 10 projects, each with its own sub-article, can be taken up individually or as a group, depending on the will of Town Meeting.

The proposed projects include: Town Hall restoration project (exterior work, $300,000); the installation of six raingardens in the James Brook watershed ($88,500); the Housing Partnership's request for perc tests on town-owned property off Smith Place and Pleasant Lane ($20,000); restoration and preservation work at the Historical Society ($51,700); purchase of land in the Brass Kettle watershed ($175,000); restoration of town archives ($50,000); construction of the culvert under Border St., between the Gulf River and harbor ($35,000); installation of a fire sprinkler system at the American Legion George H. Mealy Post 118 ($20,000); a Cohasset harbor zoning study ($20,000); and debt service for a open space acquisition ($38,479).

Article 7 is a required article in case funding is needed to pay for bills incurred by the town from previous fiscal years. As of the printing of the warrant, there are no outstanding bills. The article will likely be indefinitely postponed.

Article 8 requests $175,000 supplemental appropriations for fiscal 2008. Four different areas of the budget are currently falling short: the legal services line item ($75,000); Planning Board expenses ($10,000); Police Department personal services ($80,000); and the Facilities Maintenance personal services ($10,000).

The Board of Selectmen, on behalf of the Capital Budget Committee, is putting forth Article 9, which would create a capital stabilization fund. The fund will create a dedicated funding source for future capital improvements, capital projects and/or capital equipment for the town departments. Included in the article is a request for $250,000 to be placed into the fund.

Griffin recommended the amount come from two sources: $125,000 from the roll-off amount coming from the town's non-excluded debt service schedule for fiscal 2009 (to be transferred to the account at the start of the fiscal year, July) and a $125,000 allocation from free cash. The transfer of funds into the stabilization fund requires a two-thirds vote at Town Meeting.

Article 10 seeks to establish another stabilization fund — one for post-retirement health insurance liability. The stabilization fund will allow the town to build up a reserve of funds devoted to funding health insurance for future retired town employees. Town Meeting will also be asked to transfer $100,000 into the new funds.

Put forth by the Board of Selectmen on behalf of the Town Manager, Article 11 proposes changes to the personnel classification and compensation plan bylaw. Griffin noticed a slight discrepancy between the fringe benefits of union employees and non-union employees within the town. The changes proposed would bring the non-union employees more in line with those granted to union employees.

Article 12 — an amendment to the town's smoking bylaws — is not recommended for approval by either the Board of Selectmen or the Advisory Committee. The bylaw is, however, supported by the Board of Health. The bylaw would close the remaining gap in the town's adherence to state smoke-free workplace law. The bylaw seeks to eliminate smoking from private membership associations. Most of the private clubs in town (the yacht and sailing clubs, the Golf Club and churches) have voluntarily prohibited smoking on their property; the George H. Mealy American Legion Post has not and will be directly affected by the bylaw.

Passing the halfway mark (at least in numbered articles), Article 13 requests Town Meeting to allow the Board of Selectmen the authority to enter into a five-year extension of the inter-municipal agreement with the South Shore Recycling Cooperative. The town's participation in the cooperative enhances the town's recycling effort and related revenues.

Wind turbines are an entirely new frontier for the town of Cohasset, Article 14 proposes a set of regulations to govern large commercial-size wind turbines. Developed by the Alternative Energy Committee and supported by the Board of Selectmen, the "wind bylaw" establishes setback, noise and siting regulations for the development of large wind turbines (greater than 500 kilowatt in size, about the size of Hull Wind I). The projects would have to go through a special permit process, overseen by the Planning Board.

Hand in hand with the wind bylaw is an amendment to the town's table of permitted use regulations in the zoning bylaws (Article 15). Wind energy conversion facilities, or wind turbines, would be allowed in all zoning districts, but only be special permits. All zoning bylaw amendments need a two-thirds majority vote to pass.

Article 16, another zoning bylaw change, has been called a housekeeping item leftover from November's Special Town Meeting village business district zoning changes. The amendment transfers all special permit granting authority in the village business district to the Planning Board. Currently, non-conforming lots and buildings in the village must go before the Zoning Board of Appeals for a special permit.

Article 17 requests Town Meeting to appropriate funds to build a photovoltaic (solar) array system at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. However, matching grants are currently not available and on the advice of the Alternative Energy Committee, the article is recommended for indefinite postponement.

The next article (Article 18) seeks a Town Meeting appropriation to allow the Sewer Commission to purchase an authorized, yet unused, sewer connection. The capacity will be able to go back into the system and allow the Sewer Commission sell the connection to another lot.

The Board of Selectmen on behalf of the Housing Partnership Committee will request Town Meeting support for the creation of an Affordable Housing Trust (Article 19). An Affordable Housing Trust has been implemented in towns across the state, including nearby Hingham and Duxbury. A state statute sets out the general terms of a Housing Trust, but the one proposed for Cohasset is closely aligned with Hingham's bylaw. At its simplest terms, the Housing Trust is the functional equivalent of a separate enterprise fund, like the water and sewer departments, set up for the purposed of developing affordable housing, Housing Partnership co-chairman Tom Callahan has said. The Housing Trust, if established, would allow the committee to react quickly to affordable housing opportunities.

A nine-member committee separate from the Housing Partnership would oversee the funds in the Housing Trust account. The funds in the trust, generated from developers, possibly Community Preservation funds down the line and gifts, would be used to enable affordable housing projects either by the town or by providing subsidies to private developers.

Article 20 concerns affordable housing as well, proposing amendments to the inclusionary zoning bylaw. However, the Housing Partnership Committee has opted to tweak the bylaw a bit more and return with another draft for fall's Special Town Meeting. The article will likely be indefinitely postponed.

Article 21 will also likely be indefinitely postponed. The article seeks funding for a study of the waterfront business district, similar to what was done in the village business district last year. However, after the warrant went to print, the Planning Board sought funding from the Community Preservation Committee (see article 6) to match a private gift from Peter Roy of Border Street.

Be prepared for plenty of discussion on Article 22—Treat's Pond Restoration Project funding. The controversial article requests $300,000 in town funds to contribute to a federally supported saltmarsh restoration of Treat's Pond. The pond in question is located in the high-rent district of Atlantic Avenue, near Whitehead Road. The article, put forth by the Board of Selectmen, has sparked controversy throughout the town. Although the area suffers from severe flooding during significant rain events, the Army Corps of Engineers focus is restoring the Treat's Pond to its historical state of a saltmarsh — but, even the fact it is historically a saltmarsh has been called into question.

The town has received a $728,000 congressional appropriation to carry out the Army Corps restoration plans, on top of an initial federal funding of $270,000 for the Army Corps to study and propose construction alternatives to the town.

The $300,000 appropriation requested in the article will include an independent engineering and environmental assessment, which is estimated to cost $100,000. The remaining funds will go toward the construction of an outfall pipe that will enable tidal flow to Treat's Pond and, the Army Corps says, create a healthy saltwater ecosystem. The article will also give the Board of Selectmen the authority to acquire or take by eminent domain easements or property needed to carry out the project.

Debate has raged over the project, but much is still up in the air. The Board of Selectmen is supporting the article, but has yet to choose a route for the outfall pipe. Options include installing an outfall to the inner harbor, an outfall fall to the outer harbor via Whitehead Road/Whale Meadow or an extension of a current outfall pipe on Sandy Cove (not recommended by the Army Corps of Engineers). The Army Corps of Engineers plans are only conceptual and environmental effects have not been determined for any of the options. A look at the different options as well as the environmental effects will be within the scope of the independent engineering study.

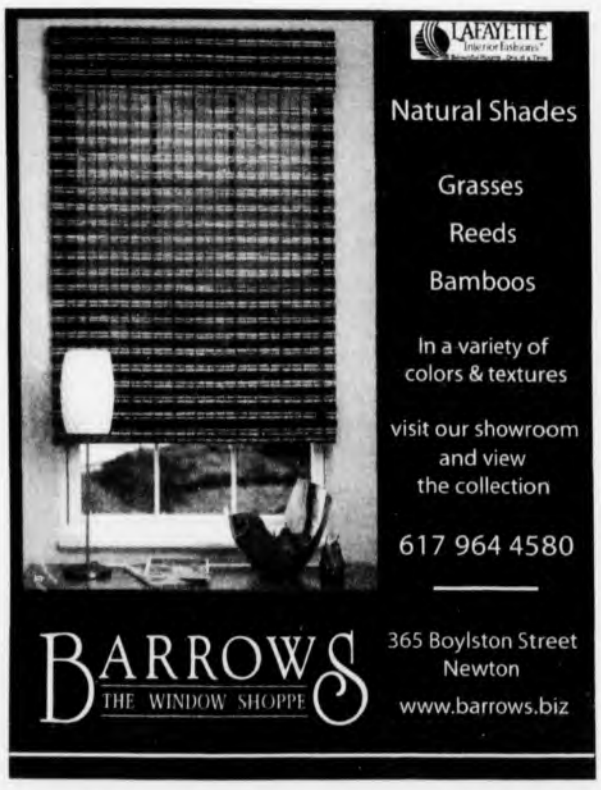
The Selectmen have requested state Sen. Robert Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley to seek state funding of about $500,000 but, as of now, no money has been earmarked at the state level. Non-federal sources must pay for 35 percent of the total project cost. The estimated cost of the project hovers at $1.7 million.

Article 23 requests $11,000 be appropriated for the re-purchase of cemetery lots. Several former residents have expressed interest in selling back to the town graves they had previously purchased as their plans for a final resting place have changed.

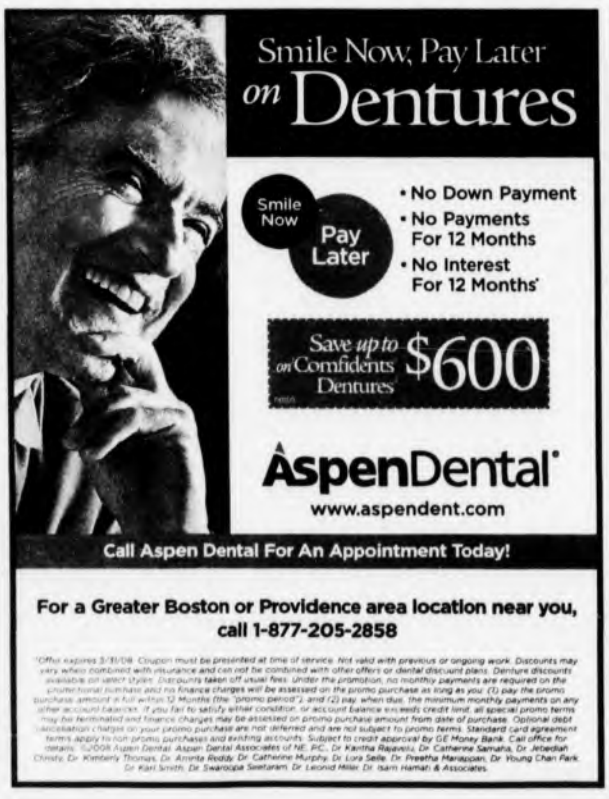
At long last, the Stormwater Management bylaw (Article 24) is ready for the primetime. After being brought forth at the 2007 Annual Town Meeting and ultimately indefinitely postponed, the Stormwater Management Committee went back to the drawing board to streamline the bylaw. The five-page Stormwater Management bylaw establishes regulations and organization to the town-wide issue of flooding and stormwater runoff. The bylaw implement controls on stormwater runoff so increased development will not exacerbate the flooding issues throughout town. The regulations ensure post-development runoff (including peak flow, total volume of runoff and water quality of runoff) for development and re-development project are equal or less than what exists now. If approved, the Conservation Commission would be the stormwater permit granting authority. The article will also bring Cohasset into compliance with the Federal Clean Water Act effective June 2008.

Lastly, Town Meeting will take up the Article 25, a Citizen's Petition proposing regulations for the operation of leaf blowers. The article would limit the use of leaf blowers to Tuesday through Saturday between 9a.m. and 5p.m. Both the Board of Selectmen and the Advisory Committee recommended disapproval of the bylaw.

Cat Dam operating schedule proposed



Selectmen will accept the schedule for operation of Cat Dam on Nichols Road pursuant to Town Manager Bill Griffin checking with the original proponents.



Cat Dam is a 50-year-old, town-owned mechanism to slow the flow of water out of inner Little Harbor. Last December, Selectmen determined the operation of Cat Dam would remain under the direction of nearby neighbors. They requested a committee of five, representative of all neighbors, be established to oversee the operation of Cat Dam going forward.

That conversation on Cat Dam was a follow-up to an initial meeting with the Selectmen in mid-October. At that meeting, the Selectmen's office was jam packed with interested neighbors, many of whom stood to hear the hour-long discussion. At the close of the meeting, the Selectmen requested the neighbors, of whom there are two distinct sides, work together to set a new schedule for opening Cat Dam. Some neighbors wanted to see increased flushing of the harbor, while others wanted to leave the current flushing schedule the same.

The neighbors advocating for increased flushing cite environmental concerns — increased algae blooms during the early summer, increased phragmite growth and the deterioration of Peck's Meadow. The other side was concerned with leaving a water cover in Little Harbor for aesthetic and property value reasons.

This week selectmen wanted to be sure that the original proponents were OK with the proposed schedule. Selectman Ted Carr raised the issue after he noticed there were some names on the list that he did not recognize.

Treat's Pond: Setting the record straight

COMMENTARY

JACQUELINE DORMITZER

Several articles, commentaries and letters to the editor on the Treat's Pond Restoration Project have appeared in recent weeks. Some of them have been factual, others almost fanciful. The debate has become clouded with contradictions, false claims and innuendo. Our purpose here is to set the record straight on the most salient issues.

What the project is about

The Treat's Pond Ecological Restoration Project is designed to restore a degraded fresh-water pond to a healthy salt pond and salt marsh. Salt water will be reintroduced into Treat's Pond through a pipe to the ocean, and a tide gate will regulate tidal flow into and out of the pond. The proposed restoration will also control flooding on Atlantic Avenue. Detailed engineering studies by the Army Corps of Engineers have demonstrated that the reintroduction of salt water into Treat's Pond will reduce phragmite (invasive plants that thrive in polluted fresh water) and eliminate bacterial pollution and mosquito infestation. Simultaneously, it will also solve one of the town's worst flooding problems.

Why extending the current pipe won't work

Some have suggested that the flooding problem can be solved cheaply by simply extending the current pipe that drains Treat's Pond into Sandy Cove. This Band-Aid solution won't work for several reasons. First, the current, undersized pipe has insufficient capacity to drain the pond effectively. Making it longer will not increase the capacity. Moreover, the current pipe would have to be extended more than 200 feet, beyond mean low tide, to surface above the sand. Storm effects, seaweed, and sand accretion would plug this extended pipe, which would be inaccessible without a marine dredge. What problem does that solve?

Any pipe on Sandy Cove is doomed to fail because of accreting sand. The mouth of the current pipe, originally above ground, is buried under 5 feet of sand. This pipe has to be opened to drain Treat's Pond and alleviate flooding after a heavy rainstorm. It can take as much as 20 minutes to a half-hour for the DPW backhoe to dig it out. Just one tide cycle will bury it again. Suggesting that anyone with a shovel could clear the pipe in two minutes is ludicrous. But if the proponent would like to give it a try, we would be glad to supply the shovel.

An essential feature of the Army Corps project is salt-water flushing of Treat's Pond to eliminate pollution. An analysis by the engineering firm Camp Dresser McKee found that bacterial levels in the pond were almost 100 times EPA standards. Any proposal to simply extend the pipe without salt-water flushing is environmentally irresponsible. The level of pollution would be unacceptably high and would constitute a reportable health hazard.

How the project will alleviate flooding

The project's tide-gate system is designed to control water levels in the pond. When a storm is predicted, the tide gate can be operated manually to empty the pond so that storm water runoff can be accommodated. The Army Corps has calculated that under high spring tide conditions the maximum elevation of the pond will reach 5.4 feet. The driveway of the nearest property is at elevation 7.7 feet, well above the level of the pond.

The route of the pipe

The Army Corps has recommended an outfall either at Whale Meadow or at Margin Street at the corner of Atlantic Avenue and Margin Street. It would parallel the pipe that already exists there. The Atlantic Avenue route would require running a pipe from Treat's Pond to Margin Street under Atlantic Avenue.

The question of eminent domain easements

There will be no taking of easements by eminent domain. The Selectmen will seek voluntary easements only.

Cost and funding of the project

The Army Corps has estimated the project's cost at $1.7 million total. Of that amount, $1.1 million will be funded by a federal grant and $300,000 or more by a state grant. The remaining $300,000 must be raised locally, probably through a long-term bond. In other words, a $300,000 investment by the town will yield $1.7 million of value. So we can pay now at 18 cents on the dollar, or pay later at 100 cents on the dollar.

How this project fits in with other town needs

Some people are concerned that by funding this project, the town will neglect other areas of town that have similar needs. In particular, concern has been raised about flood control for the properties on Elm Street that border Jacob's Meadow and are in close proximity to the sewage treatment plant. This is not an either/or proposition. The town has already spent $1.8 million for three culverts and a tide gate in that area. Another $2 million is being spent to upgrade the sewer plant and $1 million to reduce infiltration and inflow during storms. These and other measures are being taken to eliminate the flooding and pollution problems in the Jacob's Meadow neighborhood. The Treat's Pond project will not interfere with these efforts. It will address a major flooding problem that the town will be obliged to solve at some point. If we support the project now, the town can take advantage of federal funding. If we do it later, the town will forfeit the funding.

The town's decision

Article 22 in the Town Meeting Warrant asks you to approve the Army Corps Restoration Project at Treat's Pond. The decision on whether this project should go forward is rightfully yours to make at Town Meeting. Yet a very small group of opponents have taken it upon themselves to interfere with your right to consider this project. These opponents sent several letters to federal and state officials in an attempt to block funding and to deny you your right to consider the project at Town Meeting. Their attempt to undermine the democratic process is outrageous. It is your decision, not theirs. If you decide not to support Article 22, that is your right. The consequence would be the loss of federal and state aid. The flooding problem would remain. The solution to this problem will require engineering, permitting and significant construction expense and will certainly exceed the $300,000 requested in this article. It would not be supported by the federal grant.

Preconditions for the project

If Article 22 passes at Town Meeting, the project will go forward only after an independent engineering and environmental assessment is completed, and only after a state grant of at least $300,000 is assured. Funding for the engineering and environmental assessment will be included in the $1.7 million federal grant. There is virtually no risk to the town. Please support Article 22.

Keep Treat's Pond Water out of Cohasset Harbor

TO THE EDITOR:

As former members of the Cohasset Harbor Health Committee who voted unanimously last year against connecting Treat's Pond to the harbor, we are dismayed to learn that this option is back in play, thanks to a recent change of heart by the Board of Selectmen. Treat's Pond would contribute three bad things to the harbor: fecal bacteria, fresh water and nitrate.

Fecal bacteria (enterococci) are a health hazard. When their concentration in the harbor exceeds 104 counts/ml of water, the authorities shut down Bassings Beach. This typically happens several times a year. According to an Army Corps of Engineers presentation in November 2006, Treat's Pond has 10-170 counts/ml during dry weather, but 8,800 counts/ml (i.e. more than 80 times the legal limit) during wet weather. Thus, entry of Treat's Pond water into the harbor after rainfall will not only elevate the risk of infection and disease, but, by increasing the number of beach closings, also reduce recreational opportunities for townspeople. Moreover, ACE plans to introduce Treat's Pond water at the end of Atlantic Avenue near the Yacht Club, already a "hot spot" for high bacterial counts. This entry point is also in the vicinity of the lobster cars, where the lobstermen store their catch. Contaminated lobsters cannot be sold, so livelihoods are put at risk. Sewering of the Treat's Pond area next year should reduce the bacterial load, but until this is done and the bacteriologic studies performed, we cannot know to what degree this will occur.

Desalination of the harbor is already a major concern, both for its ecological effects and because it kills lobsters stored in cars, as well as other shellfish, such as clams. The sewage plant releases 300,000 gallons per day of freshwater into the harbor, leading to desalination of the inner cove. For this reason, the lobster cars have been repositioned to their present location near the Yacht Club. This improves matters, but lobsters still die after heavy rain. Piping Treat's Pond water to this area of the harbor can only add to this problem.

Nitrate is a major environmental pollutant, leading to algal blooms and consequent putrification. At present, the major source of nitrate into our harbor comes from the sewage treatment plant. Nitrate levels in Treat's Pond have not been measured, but given the high enterococcal counts, they are likely to be correspondingly high, a conclusion consistent with the rapid growth of Phragmites in the pond.

Using our own tax dollars to pipe in this second stream of pollutants will further stress, in an expensive and detrimental manner, the fragile ecosystem within Cohasset Harbor. All agree that Cohasset Harbor is among our town's greatest assets. Let's treat it with the respect and care it deserves.

Vote no on article 22 "Treat's Pond restoration Project Funding" at Town Meeting on March 29.

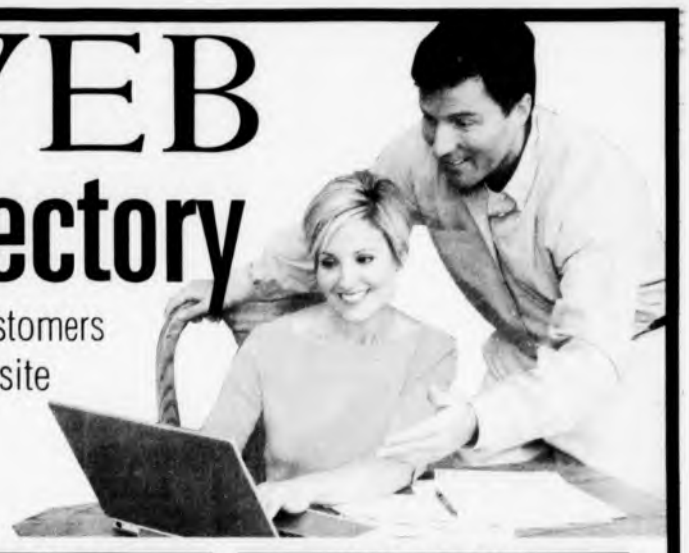
'Thank you' from the State Champs

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the girls' basketball team, coaches, and school administration, I would like to thank everyone who supported the team this season. The 44-36 overtime victory over Manchester in the Garden to capture the first Girls Basketball State Championship in twenty years for the Lady Skippers will be a memory that everyone who was in attendance will not soon forget. As the team continues to receive numerous honors, (which are much appreciated) the girls, coaches, and the school administration would like to thank all who supported the team on its' unforgettable ride.

The entire Cohasset Community stepped up as we filled 11 fan busses, pre-sold over 800 tickets, and created a sea of blue and white our side of the TD Banknorth Garden with well over 1000 fans (for a town of 7000 on a Tuesday afternoon that's pretty impressive).

An event of that magnitude cannot be pulled off without the support of an entire community. To the staff and volunteers who helped sell the 817 tickets in two days, to the teachers, event staff, custodians, bus drivers and administrators who chaperoned and drove busses, helped with game management and helped organize a pep rally after the game. Thank you.



To the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club and parents who wallpapered the town with signs, recorded the moments on video and cameras, and supported the program all year long thank you. To the police and fire departments that escorted our victorious team through town and helped keep our game site safe this season thank you. And most importantly to our student body and community fans who created a true SUPER FAN environment throughout this season and especially in the Garden the Girls Basketball team, the coaches and I thank you.

GO BLUE!!!!
